Fifth Regiment

Iowa Volunteer Cavalry

HISTORICAL SKETCH

FIFTH REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER CAVALRY

The cavalry regiment originally known as the "Curtis Horse"—which title was subsequently changed to the "Fifth Iowa Cavalry"—commenced its organization at Benton Barracks, near St. Louis, Mo., on December 20, 1861, pursuant to the following order:

HEADQUARTERS, ST. LOUIS DISTRICT,
St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 20, 1861.

Special Orders
No. 70.

I. Pursuant to Special Order No. 74, of the Department of the Missouri, to carry out special instructions from the Secretary of War, directing the organization of a cavalry regiment to be called the "Curtis Horse," the following detachments and companies are united for that purpose, viz.:

Nebraska Battalion, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel M. T. Patrick—four companies.

Detachment of Iowa and Minnesota troops, known as the command of Captain Schaffer de Boernstein—three companies.

Detachment under same command, twenty-seven men, company of Osage County Mounted Rifles, commanded by Captain Kidd—one company.

Other detachments and companies may be attached hereafter, not to exceed twelve companies.

II. The following field officers are designated, and will be mustered into service, pursuant to order No. 48, War Department, and will be respected and obeyed accordingly: W. W. Lowe, Captain U. S. Army, as Colonel; M. T. Patrick, as Lieutenant Colonel; Carl Schaffer de Boernstein, as Major. The remaining field officers will be appointed upon the completion of the regimental organization; the staff chosen by the field officers and captains of the command, except when otherwise prescribed by law, or by orders of the War Department, relating to military organizations.

By order of

BRIGADIER GENERAL CURTIS, Commanding.
N. P. CHIPMAN, Major and A. A. General.

TO LIEUTENANT COLONEL PATRICK.¹

Immediately after the issuance of the foregoing order, two companies from Minnesota, under command of Captains A. B. Brackett and D. M. West, and one company of the Irish Dragoons, from Illinois, under command of Captain P. Naughton, were ordered to report for consolidation with the regiment, thus completing its organization. The four companies designated as the Nebraska Battalion were lettered respectively A, B, C and D, and constituted the First Battalion. The three companies and detachment of Minnesota troops were lettered respectively E, F, G and H, and constituted the Second Battalion. The Osage Mounted Rifles, and Captains Brackett, West and Naughton's companies, were lettered respectively I, K, L and M, and constituted the Third Battalion. The subjoined roster shows the original field and staff and company organization, and the subsequent changes which occurred on account of death, promotion, resignation, discharge, or from whatever cause. It also gives the personal record of each officer and enlisted man in so far as such record could be obtained from the archives of the office of the Adjutant General of the State of Iowa, and of the War Department at Washington. Great effort has been made to make this revised roster of the regiment as nearly correct as possible, but there may be some names that are not correctly spelled and some records that are not complete, also some that are not entirely correct. The compiler believes that such errors and omissions have been reduced to the minimum, and that, in the main, the roster will be found correct. The regiment was composed of companies and detachments from the States of Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri and the then Territory of Nebraska. In the official history of the organization and service of the regiment, by First Lieutenant William T. Hays, a brief history of each company is given, prior to the date upon which it joined the regiment. The compiler, in preparing this condensed historical sketch, has endeavored to include, so far as the limitation of space to which he is subjected would permit, the leading features embraced in the history referred to.²

Company A was recruited at Omaha, Neb., by M. T. Patrick, and at Sidney, Iowa, by William Kelsay, some thirty men from the latter place. It was mustered into the service of the United States at Omaha, Sept. 14, 1861. Company B was recruited at Omaha, Neb., by J. T. Croft, and in Mills County, Iowa, by Milton S. Summers. About thirty of its men were from Iowa. It was mustered into the service at Omaha, Sept. 21, 1861. Company C was recruited at Nebraska City, Neb. Ter., and in Page County, Iowa, by Captain J. M. Young and Alfred Matthias, and was mustered into the service at Omaha, Oct. 3, 1861. Company D was composed of men recruited in Omaha, Neb., by William Curl, and thirty-five men from Missouri, recruited by William Aston, and was mustered into the service at St. Louis, Nov. 13, 1861. Company E was enlisted at Dubuque, Iowa, by Captain Carl Schaffer de Boernstein, for the Fremont Hussars, and went into quarters at Camp Asboth, near St. Louis. It was mustered into the service October 25, 1861, and subsequently assigned to the "Curtis Horse" Regiment. Company F was enlisted at Fort Madison and Burlington, Iowa, by Lieutenant William A. Haw, for the Fremont Hussars, and was mustered into the service at St. Louis, Oct. 28, 1861, and subsequently assigned to the "Curtis Horse" Regiment. Company G was enlisted at St. Paul and Fort Snelling, Minn., by Captain Von Minden, was mustered into the service at Fort Snelling, Minn., Oct. 9, 1861, and subsequently assigned to the "Curtis Horse" Regiment. Company H was composed of a detachment of twenty-seven men, enlisted at Bellevue, Iowa, by Lieutenant L. Millar, for the Fremont Hussars, was subsequently recruited to the number of fifty-five men, and, with William T. Hays as First Lieutenant, was mustered into the service Jan. 9, 1862, as a half company. The company organization was completed at Fort Henry, Tenn., Feb. 11, 1862, and it was assigned to the "Curtis Horse" Regiment. Company I was enlisted in Blue Earth and Scott Counties, Minn., by Captain D. M. West, and was mustered into the service at Fort Snelling, Minn., Nov. 1, 1861, and assigned to the "Curtis Horse" Regiment. Company K was enlisted at St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn., by Capt. A. B. Brackett, and was mustered into the service at Fort Snelling, Minn., Oct. 28, 1861, and assigned to the "Curtis Horse" Regiment. Company L was enlisted at St. Louis, Mo., by Captain P. Naughton, and mustered into the service at Jefferson City, Mo., Sept. 1, 1861. The company was then known as the "Irish Dragoons," of the Irish Brigade, commanded by Colonel Mulligan. This company was part of the command of Major Zagonyi at the time of his memorable charge into Springfield, Mo., and, for their gallantry on that occasion, were presented by the ladies of Springfield with a beautiful silk flag, with "Springfield" emblazoned on it. Their Captain was severely wounded in the charge, their First Lieutenant killed, and one corporal and four privates wounded. The company was subsequently assigned to the "Curtis Horse" Regiment. Company M was enlisted in Osage County, Mo., by Captain J. K. Kidd, and was mustered into the service at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., Sept. 14, 1861, as the "Osage Independent Mounted Rifles." It joined the "Curtis Horse" Regiment at Benton Barracks, Jan. 4, 1862.

Under the energetic leadership of Colonel Lowe, who was a trained soldier of the Regular Army, the regiment became quite efficient in drill and discipline before the close of January, 1862. The Government was not at that time able to procure the best quality of arms for the new regiments, and the "Curtis Horse" was compelled to take the field with one-half the men armed with the Hall carbine and the old pattern of heavy cavalry saber, and the other half with the Remington revolver and heavy saber. With this poor armament, but otherwise fairly well equipped, the regiment left Benton Barracks on Feb. 8, 1862, marched to St. Louis, and there embarked on transports and was conveyed to Fort Henry, Tenn., where it arrived and went into camp near the fort on February 11th. On February 14th, the First Battalion, under command of Major Kelsay, reported to Colonel Morgan L. Smith, and went into camp at Fort Heiman, Ky. On February 15th, pursuant to orders from General Grant, Lieutenant Colonel Patrick, and Captains West, Von Minden and Haw, with one hundred men, marched up the Tennessee River and destroyed the bridge of the Memphis and Ohio Railroad, thus preventing the rebel reinforcements reaching Fort Donelson. The detachment returned to camp on the morning of the 16th, having marched seventy-five miles in twenty-four hours. After the fall of Fort Donelson, the regiment was actively engaged in scouting, and captured some prisoners and horses, but did not encounter any considerable body of the enemy during this period of its operations. Major William Kelsay, the commander of the First Battalion, died of typhoid fever on February 28, 1862, and was buried with military honors at Fort Heiman, Ky. He was a brave and efficient officer, and his death was deplored by the regiment, and especially by the First Battalion, with which he was most closely identified.

On the 11th of March, 1862, Captain J. T. Croft, commanding the First Battalion, in pursuance of orders from General Grant, marched with two hundred fifty men twelve miles in the direction of Paris, Tenn., and there awaited the arrival of Colonel Patrick, with the Second and Third Battalions of the regiment, and the battery commanded by Captain Bullis. The movement was for the purpose of dispersing a rebel force, known to be in the vicinity of Paris and engaged in securing conscripts for the rebel army. At 11 o'clock A. M. Captain Bullis arrived with his battery, and Captain Croft moved forward without waiting for the arrival of the other two battalions. Within two miles of Paris, six of the rebel pickets were surprised and captured. The First Battalion and battery arrived at Paris at 5 o'clock P. M. and entered the town, driving the rebel pickets back to the position of the enemy, who, to the number of five hundred, were found posted on a ridge, half a mile west of the town. Two guns were placed in position on a hill within range of the enemy's position, and opened a vigorous fire. After a few rounds had been fired, Captain Lower, with Companies A and B, made a charge upon the enemy's line, but encountered fallen timber, behind which the enemy was posted, and was compelled to fall back under a severe fire and rejoin the main force. The guns were then all placed in position, and, after a heavy and rapid fire had for some time been directed against the enemy's position, his line was seen to waver and give way. The whole time occupied in the engagement was thirty-five minutes.

As it was learned that reinforcements were marching to the aid of the rebel force, Captain Croft decided to retreat until he could rejoin the other two battalions of the regiment. The next day he met Lieutenant Colonel Patrick, who had crossed the river the day before with the Second and Third Battalions, about three miles from Fort Heiman. The battle of Paris was the first experience of any portion of the regiment under the fire of the enemy. The casualties were: four killed, five wounded, and one captured. Total ten.³ Among the killed was Sergeant Major Martin Stowell, of the First Battalion. Captain Bullis, who commanded the battery, was mortally wounded and died the next day after the battle. A few days later the First Battalion moved to the camp of the other two battalions, and the regiment was again united.

On March 27, 1862, in compliance with an order from General Grant, Companies C, I and M, under command of Major Brackett, were conveyed by steamer to Savannah, Tenn., and were employed with the Army of the Tennessee during the succeeding five months. This detachment arrived at Savannah on March 29th, and went into camp. It rendered important service to the Telegraph Corps, putting up the line from Savannah to Waynesboro, a distance of twenty-five miles, where it met the advance of General Buell's army, and was subsequently employed as escort to the Telegraph Corps during the advance of General Grant's army from Pittsburg Landing to Corinth and during the siege of the latter place. After the evacuation of Corinth, the detachment was sent on a scouting expedition to the west of that place. At Cypress Creek it found the railroad bridge burned and nine locomotives partially destroyed, also the ruins of a commissary train. A six-pound brass cannon had also been abandoned by the enemy at that place. Major Brackett's detachment scoured the country in the vicinity of the destroyed bridge, and captured one hundred and twelve prisoners. With two of the locomotives which were the least injured, and which were put in running order, and with the brass cannon, and the prisoners, the detachment returned to Corinth on June 2d. On June 5th, a detail of twenty-five men of the detachment went to Purdy with a locomotive, captured seven cars found at that place and returned with them to Corinth the same day. On the 12th of June the detachment marched toward Humboldt, where it arrived on June 15th, and went into camp. While at Humboldt, Major Brackett acted as Post Commander, and Captain Young as Provost Marshal. These officers rendered valuable assistance to Colonel Hawkins, in raising his regiment (the "Second West Tennessee Cavalry"), which was composed of loyal citizens of that portion of the State, and which afterwards rendered valuable service in the Union army. The detachment also rendered important service in the capture of many rebel soldiers, large quantities of sugar, tobacco and other property, which was turned over to the commissary department, as contraband of war. General Mitchell having arrived at Humboldt with his division, the detachment was relieved from duty there and rejoined the regiment at Fort Heiman on the 29th of August, 1862.

On the 9th of April, 1862, a detachment, consisting of twenty-five men each from Companies E, F, G and H, under command of Major Schaffer de Boernstein, marched to Henry Station, where a large amount of supplies had been accumulated and were ready for shipment to the rebel army at Memphis. The Major confiscated as much of the flour and hams as he could convey to the camp of his regiment and then set fire to the depot, thus destroying the remainder of the rebel stores. He succeeded in rejoining the regiment without coming in contact with the enemy, although a considerable force had been reported in the vicinity of the station, and the Major had anticipated a fight.

³The names of all the killed, wounded and captured, in this and every other engagement or skirmish in which the regiment participated, will be found in the subjoined roster. Also the names of those who died from wounds or disease.

But this gallant and intrepid officer was not so fortunate in his next expedition. On May 3d, in accordance with orders from Colonel Lowe, a detachment under command of Major Schaffer de Boernstein, consisting of Companies E, Captain Nott, F, Captain Haw, and G, Captain Von Minden, left Camp Lowe to reconnoiter beyond Paris and the neighborhood of the Obion River. On May 6th, at 5 o'clock P. M., the detachment went into camp near Lockridge's Mill, Company F camping half a mile from the other two companies on the road towards Dresden. Pickets had been thrown out, and the usual precautions to guard against a surprise had been taken. Supper was being prepared, when the pickets were fired upon and driven back to the reserve, which, in turn, was driven to the camps, the rebel force making the attack upon both camps at the same time. The men formed in line of battle and made a gallant resistance, but were soon overpowered by the greatly superior force of the enemy. Finding themselves so completely outnumbered that further resistance was useless—after twenty-four of their number had been killed and wounded and thirty-eight had cut their way out and escaped—the remainder of the detachment, hemmed in on every side, surrendered themselves as prisoners of war. Major Carl Schaffer de Boernstein was mortally wounded and died near the scene of the action on the next day.⁴ Captain William A. Haw, while bravely endeavoring to cut his way through the ranks of the enemy, fell at the head of his company, severely wounded in the head, back and side, and was taken prisoner. Captain Nott, although severely wounded, escaped with eleven of his men, and, after suffering almost incredible hardships, reached the Union lines at Paducah, Ky. Captain Von Minden was also wounded, and captured, with fourteen men of his company. The force of the enemy numbered over 2,000, under command of the rebel Colonel Clayborne. With such a great disparity in numbers, it is simply marvelous that any of the Union soldiers could have escaped being killed, wounded or captured. The prisoners were all sent to Jackson, Miss., and, with the exception of the officers, were shortly afterwards paroled, and rejoined the regiment on June 7th. They were subsequently exchanged. The officers captured—Captains Haw and Von Minden and Lieutenant Von Vredenburg—were held in captivity until October 15th, when they were paroled, and were exchanged in December. They had not sufficiently recovered from their wounds and the hardships to which they had been subjected in prison to be able to rejoin the regiment until in January, 1863.

Upon learning of the disaster that had occurred to the detachment, Colonel Lowe started in pursuit of the enemy, with the remaining force of his own regiment, four companies of the Fifty-second Indiana Infantry, the Fourth Minnesota Infantry and a section of artillery. When within four miles of Paris, however, a peremptory order was received from General Halleck to abandon the pursuit, as the rebel force under Colonel Clayborne had retreated to Jackson, Tenn., and the force under Colonel Lowe was not large enough to risk an advance so far into the interior of the State. The troops under Colonel Lowe then returned to camp.

⁴Carl Boernstein Schaffer, of Dubuque, Iowa, was Third Sergeant of Company H, First Iowa Infantry. (Bernstein Charles Schaffer.) At the expiration of his three months' service in that regiment, which included participation in the battle of Springfield, he was given a commission with the rank of Captain, by General Fremont, and authorized to raise a troop of cavalry in Iowa, which subsequently became a part of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry. Schaffer was a German and a nobleman by birth. Succeeding to his parental titles and estate of the Barony of Boernstein, after his enlistment in the First Iowa, he assumed the surname of Boernstein, to which his estate and rank entitled him. But, instead of returning to his native land, and assuming his place among the nobility, he sacrificed his life upon the altar of his adopted country. He was a true patriot, thoroughly devoted to the cause of liberty and republican institutions.

Since the 13th of March, Companies K and L had been, on detached service guarding the telegraph line from Fort Henry to Smithland, Ky. These companies returned to the regiment on the 8th of June. The duties performed by the regiment, at this period of its service, were to assist the civil authorities in the administration of the laws, to prevent recruiting for the rebel army, and in scouting in the surrounding country. The disloyal element of the population predominated and was constantly endeavoring to give aid and comfort to the rebel cause. The officers of the regiment had a difficult task to perform. It required the exercise of good judgment and patience to protect the loyal citizens against their disloyal neighbors and to conform to the military orders which were issued from General Halleck's headquarters.

On the 25th of June, 1862, the regiment, which up to that date had been known as the "Curtis Horse," was assigned to the State of Iowa and given the designation of the "Fifth Iowa Cavalry," and this was its official name for the remainder of its term of service. On that date the regiment had an aggregate strength of 857, officers and enlisted men. During the greater portion of the remainder of the summer of 1862, the duties performed by the regiment were of the same nature as those heretofore described. No considerable force of the enemy appeared in the vicinity of Fort Heiman, where the regiment was encamped. Lieutenants William T. Hays and Robert W. Peckham were detailed as recruiting officers, and sent to Iowa July 21st. On the 26th of August, the rebel Colonel Woodward, with 600 men, made an attack upon Fort Donelson, but was repulsed by the garrison of three companies of the Seventy-first Ohio, under command of Major Hart. Upon the approach of the rebel force the Major telegraphed to Colonel Lowe for reinforcements. The Colonel promptly moved with six companies of his regiment, and arrived at Fort Donelson at 9 P. M., at which time the enemy had been repulsed and had fallen back up the river. On the morning of the 27th, at daylight, Colonel Lowe started in pursuit. After marching about six miles, the enemy's pickets were discovered near the mines of the Cumberland Iron Works. Companies B and D were deployed as skirmishers, and were soon engaged with the enemy. A deep and muddy creek stopped the advance of Company D, but Company B, under command of the gallant and intrepid Lieutenant Milton S. Summers, found a bridge, over which he crossed, under the fire of the enemy, and pushed forward. The enemy then opened fire with their one piece of artillery. Lieutenant Summers immediately gave the order to charge, and, although the gun was supported by three companies of infantry, well protected on the right by the steep bank of the river, and on the left by a strong fence and heavy timber, it was captured, and the infantry supporting it broke and fled. Flushed with this success Lieutenant Summers and his men dashed forward and came headlong upon the main body of the enemy, 400 strong, posted in the cellars of the burned houses, and among the ruins of the Iron Works. Colonel Lowe had advanced with the remainder of his force and engaged the enemy, but, having only 130 men, he found it impossible to dislodge him, and did not succeed in removing the gun which had been captured on account of the horses attached to it having been killed or disabled. The caisson and ammunition were destroyed and the gun was dismounted and abandoned. Colonel Lowe then retreated to Fort Donelson. The regiment lost in this engagement five killed and nine wounded. First Lieutenant Milton S. Summers led the charge, and, getting in advance of his men, was surrounded by the enemy. He fought gallantly, killing one of his assailants, and wounding another severely with his saber. After he had been wounded in the thigh by a bayonet and had received seven balls in his body, he drew his revolver and emptied it among his foes. He refused to surrender, and was only taken prisoner after he was mortally wounded. He died the next day. Lieutenant Hays says of him: "A more gallant officer never drew sword for his country." Second Lieutenant E. G. McNeely was also severely wounded and captured. On the 5th of September, Colonel Lowe again left Fort Donelson with the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, Thirteenth Wisconsin Infantry, Eleventh Illinois Infantry, and a battery of artillery, in pursuit of the rebel forces under Colonel Woodward. The command crossed the Cumberland River and made a vigorous march for three days, but the enemy rapidly retreated and would not risk a general engagement. Beyond the capture of a considerable amount of rebel stores at the town of Clarksville, no important results were gained by the expedition.

During the month of October the forces of the enemy, under Colonels Woodward and Napier, made several demonstrations against Forts Henry and Heiman, but no attack was made. The Fifth Iowa Cavalry was constantly called upon for scouting duty, to watch the movements of the enemy and prevent a surprise. On the 1st of November the regiment, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Patrick, joined the command of General Ransom, consisting of the Eleventh Illinois Infantry, a detachment of the Thirteenth Wisconsin Infantry, a detachment of the Eighty-third Illinois Infantry, one company of the Sixth Illinois Cavalry and one section of Floyd's Battery. With this force, General Ransom marched against the enemy, who had been threatening to attack the forts. The pursuit was pushed vigorously, the Fifth Iowa and the company of the Sixth Illinois Cavalry taking the advance. On the 6th of November Lieutenant Colonel Patrick's command captured a portion of the enemy's supply train. November 7th, the enemy was found in line of battle at Garrettsburg, Ky. After a brief skirmish, the enemy retreated two miles, with the cavalry and artillery in pursuit, closely followed by the infantry. The enemy again took position and was vigorously attacked by General Ransom's troops, and, after a brief engagement, was driven from the field with a loss of seventeen killed, eighty-five wounded and sixty prisoners. Lieutenant Gallagher and Private Roach of Company L, Fifth Iowa Cavalry, were among the killed in this engagement. It was the first time in which the regiment had gone into action with a force properly proportioned to that of the enemy, and the result clearly showed that, where the contending forces were nearly evenly matched, the Union troops were able to vanquish their rebel foes. In his official report, General Ransom highly complimented the Fifth Iowa Cavalry for its conduct on the march and in the engagement. The regiment returned to Fort Heiman November 11th. During the remainder of the month, and in December, the regiment was employed in building winter quarters at Fort Heiman and in scouting through the surrounding country.

The month of January, 1863, was not marked by any event of special importance. The regiment was actively engaged in scouting, but there is no record of any encounter with the enemy during the month. On the 3d of February, Captain Von Minden, of Company G, with twenty-eight of his men, while engaged in scouting near the Cumberland Iron Works, met the advance of the rebel General Forrest's command, then marching to attack Fort Donelson. The captain and his men fell into an ambush, which had been skillfully planned by the enemy, and the little detachment, being completely surrounded by a greatly superior force, had no alternative but to surrender. The rest of the regiment promptly marched from Fort Heiman to reinforce the garrison at Fort Donelson but, upon its arrival, found that the rebel force had failed in their attack upon the fort and had retreated. On February 6th, the regiment returned to its headquarters at Fort Heiman, where it remained until March 5, 1863, upon which date orders were received to evacuate Fort Heiman, and the regiment moved to Fort Donelson, where it was stationed until the 5th of June, 1863, in the performance of duties much the same as those in which it had previously been engaged. The record shows but two occasions in which portions of the regiment came into conflict with the enemy during this period of its service. The first of these was upon the 10th of April, when Company H, which had been upon a scout, in which it had discovered a considerable force of the enemy, near Waverly, was returning towards Fort Donelson, closely pursued by a party of rebels. Upon nearing the fort the rebels abandoned the pursuit, and were returning towards Waverly, when they were met and attacked by Company M, of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, which had also been on a scout. In the fight which ensued the rebels were quickly defeated, with a loss of three killed and twenty-one captured, including their commander, Major Blanton, and Surgeon Smith, while the loss of Company M was one man wounded. In this fight the rebels were evidently surprised and taken at a disadvantage, and the situation, which had several times existed in previous conflicts, was reversed. On the 19th of May, Lieutenant Colonel Patrick, commanding seven companies of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry and other troops from the garrison at Fort Donelson, went upon an expedition lasting five days, during which a large quantity of bacon and other supplies belonging to the enemy were captured. Upon the return march Company A, of the Fifth Iowa, had a skirmish with the enemy, in which Captain Paul had his horse killed under him and himself received a slight wound. Lieutenant Beatty, of Company M, was also slightly wounded. The rebels were pursued for some distance, but made their escape.

On the 5th of June, 1863, the regiment left Fort Donelson and entered upon a larger field of operations. It marched to Nashville, and thence to Murfreesboro, where it was assigned to the First Brigade of the Second Division of the Cavalry Corps, Army of the Cumberland. General Rosecrans had then commenced his grand movement against the rebel General Bragg's army. For the next three months the Fifth Iowa Cavalry was engaged in heavy scouting duty about Lebanon and Murfreesboro. On the 25th of June the regiment was scouting in the direction of Guy's Gap, upon a stony and difficult road through a dense thicket of Cedars, when it encountered a force of the enemy, which it drove before it for over a mile, and developed the position of the main force of the enemy, which was the purpose of the reconnaissance upon which it had been sent. In this encounter the loss to the enemy (as subsequently reported) was thirty killed and wounded, while that of the Fifth Iowa was but two men wounded. The regiment was highly complimented by the General commanding for its prompt and effective action in this affair. On the 26th of July the regiment moved to Lebanon and Silver Springs, and from that date until the close of the month had captured forty prisoners. On July 31st it returned to Murfreesboro, and during the month of August was engaged in guarding trains from that place to the front. On September 6th the regiment, except Companies I and K, left Murfreesboro for McMinnville, Tenn., where it arrived September 8th, and remained until the 26th, during which time detachments were sent to Sparta, Woodbury and Tracy City, upon scouting expeditions. In one of these, Lieutenant D. H. Stevens, of Company B, was wounded.

From September 26th to the close of the month the regiment was again on the march and, on September 30th, was in camp near Winchester, from which place it again took up the line of march to watch the movements of the rebel force under the command of General Wheeler, which had crossed the mountains for the purpose of destroying bridges and otherwise rendering the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad useless for the transportation of troops and supplies for the Union army. The regiment moved from Winchester to different points along the line of the railroad and, on October 6th, had a skirmish with the enemy, in which it had one man—Henry Perkins of Company K—mortally wounded. On October 9th, in another skirmish with the enemy, E. W. Sloan, of Company H, was wounded. The pursuit was kept up to the Tennessee River, but the rebel General Wheeler, by marching his cavalry day and night, succeeded in getting across the river and making his escape, after losing about one hundred and fifty of his men, killed, wounded and captured. In this pursuit, the entire Second Cavalry Division, under command of General Crook, was engaged. Colonel Lowe of the Fifth Iowa was in command of the First Brigade, and Lieutenant Colonel Patrick commanded the regiment. From the Tennessee River the Second Cavalry Division turned in pursuit of the rebel General Roddy's cavalry, then in camp at Athens, Tenn. Lieutenant Colonel Patrick, with the Fifth Iowa and a detachment of the Fourth Michigan Cavalry, marched all night on October 17th, reaching Athens at sunrise, to find the rebel force had withdrawn across the river. Lieutenant Colonel Patrick then returned with his command to Maysville, having marched seventy miles in twenty-four hours. While no general engagement had been fought, the designs of the rebel General had been frustrated and the Union line of transportation protected and kept open for the passage of troops, supplies and munitions of war. From October 17th to November 14th, the regiment remained in camp at Maysville, giving the men and horses a much needed rest before again resuming active operations against the enemy.

On the 14th of November, Major Young, of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, commanding a select force of 400 men from the Fourth United States Cavalry, Seventeenth and Seventy-second Indiana Mounted Infantry, and Fifth Iowa Cavalry, under orders from Colonel Lowe, then in temporary command of the Second Cavalry Division, moved from Maysville to prevent a flank movement of the enemy across the Tennessee River. Major Young marched with his command across the mountains in rear of Huntsville, by way of Blevins' Gap, to avoid the spies of the enemy. On the march a drove of hogs—which was being driven towards the enemy's camp—was captured, and, on arriving at the Tennessee River, the ferry boat was captured, and many valuable horses, which had been secreted by the enemy on the adjacent islands, were also captured. Destroying the ferry boat, the command marched to Triana, where the enemy had taken the precaution to keep all the boats on the opposite side of the river, to be sent over only when preconcerted signals were given, to indicate that Union troops were not in the vicinity of the landing. As the destruction of these boats was one of the main objects of the expedition, volunteers were called for to cross and secure them. Sergeant Phelps—of Company G—and eleven men from the Fifth Iowa Cavalry were selected from those who volunteered, and, by means of row boats and canoes, and under cover of sharpshooters, they crossed the river and captured two large ferry boats without losing a man. With these boats a party of thirty men started down the river, while Major Young's command marched down along the river bank to co-operate with them. Eight large boats were captured during the night and, at day-break, the object of the expedition was accomplished, the boats were destroyed, and the command started on the return march to camp, where it arrived November 17th. The result of this expedition—in which the Fifth Iowa Cavalry bore such a conspicuous part—was the capture of a rebel Captain and eight of his men, nine large ferry boats captured and destroyed, two hundred fine mules and horses captured, one mill—used by the enemy—destroyed, and negroes brought in to complete the organization of a regiment, then in camp at Maysville. Of this expedition General Elliott, Chief of Cavalry, said: "The success of the scout under command of Major J. M. Young, Fifth Iowa Cavalry, shows that he has been energetic, and shows good judgment in the management of his command." The report of Major Young also received acknowledgment, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE CUMBERLAND,
Chattanooga, Tenn., November 30, 1863.

BRIGADIER GENERAL GEORGE CROOK, Commanding
Second Cavalry Division, Maysville, Ala.

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the report of Major J. M. Young, Fifth Iowa Cavalry, of his expedition through the country situated between the Memphis and Charleston Railroad and the Tennessee River, between the 14th and 17th inst. The Major General commanding directs that you tender his thanks to Major Young for the brave, energetic and prudent manner in which the expedition was conducted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM D. WHIPPLE,
Brigadier General and A. A. G.⁵

On November 25th, the regiment, with its brigade and division, marched to Huntsville, Ala., and went into camp. On November 27th, the Fifth Iowa, and seven companies of the Fourth United States Cavalry, with Lieutenant Colonel Patrick in command, started upon an expedition, lasting eleven days, which accomplished important results in the capture of hogs, cattle, a ferry boat and other property intended for the use of the rebel army. There was some skirmishing with the pickets of the enemy at Gunter'sville on November 29th, in which no casualties occurred, and during the remainder of the expedition, which covered a considerable extent of territory, there is no record of any encounter with the enemy. Upon the return march, Companies F, G, H and I, of the Fifth Iowa, were left at Dodsonville, under the command of Major Brackett, where they remained and performed the duty of patrolling the country along the Tennessee River for a distance of forty miles, until relieved on the 21st of December, when they marched to Huntsville and rejoined the regiment. While the detachment was on duty at Dodsonville—on the 19th of December—Major Brackett sent Sergeants McGuire and Ireland, and Private Ireland of Company H, to Paint Rock with dispatches. When within four miles of their destination the party was captured by a band of twenty-one rebel soldiers, and their arms, money and other property, together with most of their clothing, taken from them. Private Ireland, who had charge of the dispatches, managed to secrete them, so they were not discovered, but, fearing their subsequent discovery and the penalty of being executed as spies, the three prisoners kept a constant lookout for an opportunity to escape. That night the rebels camped upon the mountain side near its summit, carefully guarding their prisoners. The next morning, leaving two of their number on guard, with orders to shoot the prisoners should they attempt to escape, the rest of the band went down the mountain to watch the road over which the Union troops might be expected to pass. The prisoners awaited their opportunity, and, at the first moment their guards slightly relaxed their vigilance, sprang upon and succeeded in partially disarming them. In the struggle which ensued both the guards were killed and the prisoners escaped. The bodies of the two rebel soldiers were found where they fell, the next day, their companions having fled and left them unburied. Major Brackett reported the affair, congratulating the men upon their good fortune in escaping, and thanking Private George Ireland for his preservation of the official dispatches.

On December 24th the regiment, with its brigade and division, left Huntsville and marched to Pulaski, which place was reached on December 28th, and the troops went into camp there. On January 1, 1864, (more than three-fourths of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry having re-enlisted as veteran volunteers,) preparations were made to leave the field, by turning over horses, arms and equipments, and, on January 7th, the regiment started for Nashville, the first part of the journey being made on foot and the latter part by rail. The regiment arrived at Nashville on January 10th, and went into barracks. It remained there until January 29th—having been re-mustered and paid in the meantime—and, on the date last mentioned, embarked on steamer and was conveyed to Cairo, Ill., arriving there January 31st. On February 1st, Companies L and M were furloughed at Cairo and embarked on steamer for St. Louis. On the same date, Companies G, I and K received their furloughs and left by rail for Minnesota. On the same date, Lieutenant Colonel Patrick, with the remaining companies of the regiment, left Cairo on a special train for Davenport, Iowa, where they received furloughs on February 3d, with orders to report at Davenport on March 5th. On the 25th of February, 1864, Companies G, I and K were re-assigned to the State of Minnesota, by Special Order No. 91, of the Secretary of War, and organized as an independent battalion, with Major Brackett in command. The subsequent history of this battalion is, therefore, disconnected with that of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry.

The remaining companies of the regiment reported at the rendezvous at Davenport, March 5, 1864, and went into quarters at Camp McClellan, and there awaited further orders. On March 17th, Lieutenants Hays and Langdon were detailed on recruiting service, under orders from the War Department, to raise three new companies for the regiment to replace Companies G, I and K, transferred to the State of Minnesota. On March 22d the nine companies then composing the regiment left Davenport by rail and arrived at Nashville, Tenn., March 31st and went into camp near that city.

During the month of April, 1864, the regiment lay in camp near Nashville, doing picket duty dismounted, as horses could not be procured. On May 5th, all the portion of the regiment for which arms had been procured left Nashville, under command of Major Beard, and proceeded to Pulaski, where it was assigned to the duty of guarding the Nashville and Decatur Railroad. About this time Colonel Lowe was assigned to the command of the Third Cavalry Division, and Major Young and Lieutenants Hinds and Watson were detailed as members of his staff. Lieutenant Colonel Patrick remained with the unarmed portion of the regiment at Nashville, awaiting a supply of arms and horses. During the month of June, 1864, Lieutenant Colonel Patrick obtained some 360 horses, a few carbines, and horse equipments sufficient for the whole regiment. On July 9th all the companies of the regiment were reunited at Decatur, Ala., and on the next day—horses and a sufficiency of arms having been procured—the regiment became a part of the cavalry division commanded by General Rousseau, which had just been organized and was ready to start upon an expedition through a region of country which had not before been penetrated by Union troops. The command consisted of the Eighth Indiana, Second Kentucky and Ninth Ohio Cavalry, composing the First Brigade, under command of Colonel Harrison of the Eighth Indiana; and the Fifth Iowa, Fourth Tennessee Cavalry and a section of artillery, composing the Second Brigade, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Patrick of the Fifth Iowa, with Major Beard commanding the regiment. Major General L. H. Rousseau, an able officer and a good disciplinarian, was in command of the division. The whole command numbered somewhat less than 3,000 men. The men were well armed, lightly equipped and provided with rations of bread, bacon, coffee and sugar to last five days, or longer, if necessary, with what could be procured in the country through which they were to march. No wagons accompanied the expedition. There were three pack mules to each company, to convey rations, ammunition, etc., and but one ambulance to each regiment. Thus equipped for rapid marching, the command of General Rousseau moved out of Decatur on July 10, 1864. Limitation of space will not permit a detailed description of this or the other notable expeditions in which the Fifth Iowa Cavalry participated in the closing campaigns of the war. In summing up the results of the expedition under General Rousseau, Lieutenant Hays says:

July 22d at daybreak the march was resumed, and at noon the command reached our pickets at Sweet Water Bridge, and arrived at Marietta at sunset and went into camp, the men and horses nearly worn out with the almost continuous march of thirteen days and nights, during which time the command marched 380 miles, entirely in the enemy's territory, destroyed 35 miles of railroad, five large depots filled with cotton and supplies for the rebel army, one shot and shell manufactory, one locomotive and train of cars, and captured many valuable horses and mules, inflicting a loss on the enemy estimated at twenty millions of dollars. All this was accomplished with a loss to us of one Captain and four privates killed and eight privates wounded. All the above loss was in the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, except one man of the Eighth Indiana Cavalry, wounded; which shows the prominent part the Fifth Iowa Cavalry bore in what may well be termed the most successful raid of the war.³

Among the killed was Captain William Curl, of Company D, and among the severely wounded was Captain J. C. Wilcox, of Company H. The entire loss of the two brigades, in killed, wounded and missing, did not exceed thirty men. It will thus be seen that the Fifth Iowa Cavalry sustained nearly one-half the casualties of the entire command, and took the most conspicuous part of any regiment engaged in the expedition.

The next expedition in which the regiment participated began with the accomplishment of most brilliant results, and ended most disastrously. On July 23d, the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, with the other troops composing the command of Colonel Harrison, marched to the relief of General Stoneman, whose force had been picketing the Chattahoochee River from Sweet Water to Nick-a-Jack Creek. The command marched all night, arriving at the river at noon the next day. The enemy was posted on the opposite side of the river. The Fifth Iowa Cavalry was ordered to report to General McCook. The regiment marched up the river six miles, crossed on a pontoon bridge, and reported at General McCook's headquarters, when it was ordered to proceed to Vining's Station and draw three days' rations, and then rejoin the command. The rations were drawn, the regiment joined the command of General McCook and, at noon of July 26th, started with that command on the memorable raid to the rear of Atlanta. The object of the raid was the destruction of the enemy's communications on the Atlanta and Macon Railroad, the objective point being Lovejoy's Station. All the afternoon and the following night the march was continued down the Chattahoochee River, and, at sunrise on July 28th, the command had reached a point opposite Campbellton, where a force of the enemy was posted. The troops marched on down the river to a point five miles below Campbellton, where a pontoon bridge was laid across the river, upon which the troops crossed and pushed rapidly forward, reaching Palmetto Station, on the Atlanta and West Point Railroad, about dark. Here about 600 of the enemy were stationed, who, after a slight skirmish, were driven off, and the depot fired, the telegraph wire torn down, and the railroad track torn up for a short distance. After completing the work of destruction the troops moved on, the Fifth Iowa Cavalry acting as rear guard, and the march continuing until a train of 500 wagons, containing the extra baggage of the rebel army at Atlanta, was overtaken and captured, together with the 250 officers and men who were guarding it, and 2,000 fine mules and horses. The wagons, which were loaded with various kinds of army property, were burned with their contents. After destroying the train the command marched to Fayetteville, where it arrived at daylight on the morning of July 29th. Halting only long enough to feed and rest the horses, the troops pushed forward to Lovejoy's Station, the objective point of the expedition, and, upon arriving there, destroyed a portion of the track of the Atlanta and Macon Railroad, and burned the depot.

The results of the expedition had thus far been eminently successful and the damage inflicted upon the enemy very great. The commanding General of the rebel cavalry now concentrated his forces rapidly for the purpose of intercepting and cutting off the retreat of the Union troops engaged in this daring raid, and the return march was replete with disaster to General McCook's command. After leaving Lovejoy's Station the troops marched rapidly, with the Fifth Iowa Cavalry in advance and the Eighth Iowa Cavalry as rear guard. The troops had marched but a few miles, however, when the rear guard was fiercely attacked, and the Eighth Iowa lost two officers and seven men killed, and fourteen men wounded in the fight which ensued. Part of the command turned back to assist the Eighth Iowa, and the enemy was repulsed. In the meantime, the Fifth Iowa, marching rapidly in advance, came to the bridge over Flint River, and found the enemy in the act of firing it. After a brisk encounter the enemy was driven off, and the regiment crossed the bridge, accompanied by the artillery—two Parrott guns, which were quickly placed in position to cover the bridge, the Fifth Iowa taking position in support of the guns. In a short time the rest of General McCook's command arrived, closely pursued by the enemy, but succeeded in crossing the bridge, which was then destroyed. The Fifth Iowa Cavalry again took the advance on the road leading to Fayetteville, but, after marching for two miles, was ordered back to the main command, which had not moved. Again the regiment was ordered to advance on the same road, and again ordered to return after going about the same distance. Three precious hours were lost by this vacillation and delay. Finally, at dark, General McCook sent four companies of the Fifth Iowa to the rear, with orders to remain and report the movements of the enemy. The balance of the regiment was placed in front, with Company H, commanded by Lieutenant Hays, in the advance, with orders to charge, if he encountered the enemy, and keep the road clear for the advance of the rest of the command. Soon after the march was resumed, the advance encountered a force of the enemy. A charge was promptly made and the rebels were repulsed and driven away, without scarcely interrupting the march of the main column. The march was continued during the night, but slow progress was made on account of the difficulty of keeping the prisoners and the large number of captured horses and mules well under guard. At 10 A. M., July 30th, the advance reached the town of Newnan, where a force of 1,000 rebels had taken position. Major Beard, with five companies of the Fifth Iowa and two companies of the Eighth Indiana, charged into the town, but was unable to dislodge the enemy. General McCook then ordered the Fifth Iowa and Eighth Indiana to remain in line of battle and hold the enemy in check, while he moved with the rest of the command, and the prisoners, around the town to the left. The movement occupied two hours, and compelled the command to march at least five miles out of a direct course, thereby enabling the enemy to concentrate a large force to resist the further advance of the column. About four miles from Newnan this force was encountered. The two Parrott guns were placed in position and shelled the enemy vigorously. The enemy made three separate charges upon the guns, fighting desperately for their possession, but each charge was repulsed, and the guns continued their fire until the ammunition was exhausted. The guns were then spiked, the wheels cut down and, thus rendered useless, they were abandoned. General McCook found his command completely surrounded by a greatly superior force under the command of the rebel General Wheeler. The situation was most desperate. Orders were given to each regiment to charge and cut its way through the enemy's lines. After desperate fighting and heavy loss, all the regiments, except the Eighth Iowa, succeeded in cutting their way through the rebel forces. The Eighth Iowa, being ordered to cover the rear, was cut off by the enemy and nearly all captured. The regiments which succeeded in getting through the lines of the enemy did not all get together again, but reached the Chattahoochee River at different places. General McCook, with the Fifth Iowa, Eighth Indiana and Fourth Tennessee Cavalry, arrived at Philpot Ferry about midnight, and commenced crossing the troops on the ferry boat. The Eighth Indiana had succeeded in getting across when the enemy appeared in force and attacked the remainder of the command. Finding themselves opposed to overwhelming numbers, most of the men abandoned their horses, and a considerable number of them escaped by swimming the river. The mounted men, under General McCook, continued to retreat, and reached Marietta five days later. The dismounted men took to the woods in small parties and many were captured, while some escaped and reached the Union lines at different points, after suffering great hardships from hunger and exposure. They were constantly pursued, and it was marvelous that any of them succeeded in avoiding capture. The loss of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry in this raid was very heavy. First Lieutenant Andrew Guler, of Company E, was killed; First Lieutenant William T. Hays, of Company H, was taken prisoner, and 119 enlisted men were killed, wounded and captured.

The scattered remnants of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry were collected as they came in, at a camp near Sandtown, where they remained until August 18th. At this time the effective force of the regiment was but ninety men. With this remnant of the regiment, Major Young joined the Third Cavalry Division, under command of General Kilpatrick, in an expedition against the enemy, on the line of the Atlanta and West Point Railroad. General Kilpatrick, with the main force, moved directly against the enemy at East Point, while the Fifth Iowa and Third Indiana, under Lieutenant Colonel Kline, of the latter regiment, made a dash on the railroad at Fairburn, burning the depot, mills and storehouses, tearing up two miles of track, and returning with the loss of but one man wounded, and bringing in six prisoners. On the 26th of August the regiment again left its camp at Sandtown and, with the Third Indiana, made another rapid movement, marched all night, struck the railroad near Bear Creek Station, captured a commissary train, tore up a couple of miles of track, and, by hard marching all the following night, returned to camp. Several of the men, exhausted by their previous hard marching, halted for rest on the return march and were captured by the enemy.

On the 28th of August the regiment, now greatly reduced in numbers and with Major Young in command of the brigade (relieving Lieut. Col. Kline of the Third Indiana, who was compelled to relinquish the command on account of sickness) again moved, with the Third Cavalry Division, to the rear of the enemy at Jonesboro. In this movement the regiment lost heavily in proportion to its number engaged. Lieutenant Peter McGuire was killed, eight men were wounded and ten missing. The regiment was highly complimented by General O. O. Howard for its gallantry in action. On the 1st of September the regiment with its brigade covered the retreat to Jonesboro and East Point, going into camp at the latter place. Here it was joined by the veterans and recruits of the Fifth Iowa Infantry, then consolidated into two companies, I and G, under command of Captain Albert G. Ellis. Under an order of the War Department, dated August 18, 1864, these companies, constituting the remnant of the Fifth Iowa Infantry, had been transferred to and consolidated with the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, on account of the fact that neither regiment had a sufficient number of men left to maintain a separate regimental organization. These veteran soldiers of the Fifth Iowa Infantry had a splendid record of three years' hard service, which was continued with the Fifth Iowa Cavalry to the close of the war.⁷ The arduous campaign around Atlanta had so completely worn out the horses of the regiment that only thirty were fit for service at the time the consolidation with the Fifth Infantry took place. The regiment was therefore ordered to Nashville to be remounted and completely equipped.

On October 1, 1864, the consolidated regiment moved by rail towards Nashville. The water of the Chattahoochee River was at flood stage and the bridge was unsafe, but fortunately it stood until the train conveying the regiment had passed over it. Within twenty minutes after the train crossed, the bridge was swept away by the rushing waters, and the regiment proceeded on its way, saved from a great disaster. At Marietta the train lay all night and the next day, waiting for repairs to be made to the road, which had been damaged by the enemy, and a train loaded with supplies for the Union army captured. Information having been received that the construction party engaged in repairing the track had been attacked and driven off by the enemy, permission was obtained by Major Young to take his regiment and protect the working party until the repairs were completed. Accordingly the regiment proceeded to the point where the work was to be done. Upon its approach, the rebel force retreated and, by 10 o'clock at night, the road was repaired and the train moved on. On October 3d, at noon, the train conveying the regiment crossed the Etowah bridge at Allatoona and, in the afternoon, that bridge was swept away. That same evening, when within four miles of Dalton, the track was found torn up for a considerable distance. The regiment promptly proceeded to repair the damage, one-half the men going out on picket duty while the other half worked all night and until noon the next day, when the damage was repaired and the train was again under way. The regiment reached Nashville without further mishap on the 6th of October, and went into camp near the city. It remained there until October 27th, when it moved by rail to Louisville, Ky., where Major Young succeeded in procuring 500 horses, and, on November 3d, the regiment began its march on the return to Nashville, where it arrived on November 14th. It was soon after supplied with 500 Spencer carbines, and otherwise fully equipped for a renewal of active operations against the enemy.⁸

On the 22d of November the regiment was again upon the march and, on the 24th, was within four miles of Columbia, Tenn., which was threatened with an attack. The Fifth Iowa formed in line of battle about a mile from Columbia, awaiting the attack, but the enemy retired and moved towards Pulaski; the Fifth Iowa followed, taking the advance, with orders to develop the enemy's position and report to General Stanley. The movement was successfully executed, and Major Young, who was in command of the regiment, was complimented by the General for the promptness with which his order was executed. It was discovered that the rebel General Forrest was approaching with a strong force, and four companies of the Fifth Iowa were sent across Duck River to watch his movements. About three miles from the river the advance guard of the rebel cavalry force was discovered and the detachment retreated across the river and rejoined the regiment, which soon became engaged with the advance of the enemy, and, by hard fighting, successfully resisted his passage of the river until dark. It was then discovered that the enemy had crossed the river in heavy force, above, and that the Fifth Iowa, Sixteenth Illinois and Eighth Michigan Regiments were penned up in a bend of the river with a line of the enemy in their rear. A charge was at once ordered by Major Young and, with his regiment in the advance, the three regiments cut their way through the enemy's lines, and at 11 o'clock at night reported at Major General Wilson's headquarters. The General complimented Major Young and his regiment for the gallant manner in which they had led the charge and extricated the command from its perilous position. The loss of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry in this encounter was fifteen men, killed, wounded and missing. From November 29th to December 1st the regiment took part in the operations of the cavalry corps which was co-operating with the army under command of Major General Thomas, and during the battle of Franklin, and after the battle, rendered important service in covering the rear and flanks of the army. There is no record of casualties in the Fifth Iowa during these operations.

⁸As limitation of space has compelled the compiler to omit many details of the operations of the regiment, in the preceding pages, he also finds himself confronted with the necessity of condensing the history of its concluding operations, replete with the thrilling incidents which will be recalled by those survivors of the regiment who may read this imperfect sketch. The student of the military history of the State will, however, find these details more fully described in the history of the regiment, reference to which has heretofore been made.

On the 1st of December the regiment was in camp at Edgefield, on the Cumberland River, opposite Nashville. On December 2d Lieutenant Colonel Beard assumed command of the regiment. On December 12th the entire cavalry corps moved across the Cumberland River for the purpose of taking part in the movement of General Thomas against the rebel army of General Hood, then investing the city of Nashville. On the 15th of December General Thomas assumed the offensive, and the battle of Nashville was fought, during which Lieutenant John W. Watson of Company H, Fifth Iowa Cavalry, was killed. The regiment joined in the pursuit of the defeated enemy, and during the pursuit had several skirmishes, the most notable of which occurred on December 25th, at the town of Pulaski and at the bridge over Richland Creek. In these encounters the regiment lost twenty men, killed and wounded. The pursuit was continued until the last troops of General Hood's shattered rebel army had been driven across the Tennessee River. On December 31, 1864, the Fifth Iowa Cavalry went into camp on the bank of Elk River.

There is no record of any important operation in which the regiment took part during the remainder of the winter. Major J. M. Young was promoted Colonel of the regiment January 25, 1865, to succeed Colonel W. W. Lowe, who was mustered out and received an honorable discharge from the service January 24, 1865.⁹

The last great movement in which the regiment participated was the cavalry raid, under Brevet Major General James H. Wilson. The part of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry in that famous raid is thus described in the official report of Colonel Young:

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH IOWA CAVALRY,
Macon, Ga., April 24, 1865.

GENERAL: In accordance with instructions from your headquarters, I have the honor to report, that during the campaign of the Cavalry Corps, M. D. M., commencing from Chickasaw Bluffs, Ala., on the morning of the 22d of March, 1865, and now arrested at this place, the Fifth Regiment of Iowa Veteran Volunteer Cavalry has marched five hundred and eighty-two miles. On Tuesday, the 28th ult., the regiment being in the advance, skirmished very slightly with a few of the enemy, from Five Mile Creek to the town of Elyton, capturing two of them, belonging to the Alabama Cavalry (Colonel Patterson commanding), near the town. This Confederate regiment had been hastily withdrawn from the Huntsville and Decatur Roads, on which it expected we would have advanced, and had passed through Elyton but a few hours previous to our advance entering. No loss or accident during the day. On Friday, ⁹Colonel Lowe had not been on duty with the regiment since he was assigned to the command of the Third Cavalry Division, in May, 1864. On August 1, 1864, he was ordered to Nashville and assigned to duty in the Department of the Cumberland, and there is no record of his having rejoined the regiment. The record shows the date of his muster out, January 24, 1865, and that he was given the rank of Brevet Brigadier General, United States Volunteers, March 13, 1865.

the 31st ult., at Montevallo, about 11:30 o'clock A. M., the enemy showed themselves in some force, in line. The Fifth Iowa Cavalry being in advance, and with one and one-half companies, which, with the non-commissioned staff and orderlies, comprised about sixty men in all, in column on the main road to Randolph, charged the enemy, breaking their lines, and following them up so closely as to frustrate their attempts to rally. After running our horses for about one and a half miles at the full charge, the heat and exhaustion were so great as to compel us to dismount. Our force proceeded on foot, driving the enemy one or two miles further, when we were relieved by the First Brigade of the Fourth Division. In the charge (mounted) several of the enemy were ridden down and otherwise wounded; our force, however, was too small to guard the prisoners to the rear. As fast as they surrendered, they were faced about and ordered to the rear. Many undoubtedly took this opportunity to escape after surrendering. Twenty of these prisoners were received at corps headquarters. They belonged to Forrest's command, and some were of his provost guard. Proud of the honor of initiating this campaign, so promising in important results, the regiment vied with itself in giving eclat to this first meeting with the enemy in force. The regiment lost one man mortally wounded (since dead). Saturday, April 1st, the regiment took part in the battle at Ebenezer Church. Arriving at a critical time, it was hastily dismounted by companies, as they arrived, and these were thrown successively against the enemy, where they rivaled one another in pressing forward, and in their bravery and daring. Some of the men of the regiment were picked up after the fight, utterly exhausted, having charged about two miles on foot and wading Bogler's Creek, pursuing the enemy. The regiment captured one piece of artillery with limber chest and horses. The capture of prisoners was completely ignored in the eagerness of the men to press forward so long as there was an enemy in front still showing resistance. Shortly after the complete rout of the enemy, we were relieved by the First Brigade, Fourth Division, charging in, mounted. Sunday, April 16th, Companies A and F, under special direction of Brevet Major General Upton, opened the assault upon Columbus, charging upon the enemy's right, and drawing their infantry and artillery fire. The regiment took a slight part in this engagement, by driving in the enemy's outposts and skirmish line in their front and center. We then lay down, under fire from the enemy's artillery, and awaited further orders. Companies E, L and M, being my advance skirmish line, were ordered forward without my knowledge by the A. A. G., and took part in the general assault, which resulted in the capture of the enemy and place, without loss or accident. Each and every individual member of the regiment, both officers and men, have, during this campaign, seemed to contest with each other in bravery, daring and coolness, for the honor and glory of the regiment and the success of the cause; but neither opportunity nor accident offered to any individual the occasion for such distinction as would justify special mention.¹⁰

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. MORRIS YOUNG, Colonel
Commanding Fifth Iowa Cavalry.

TO BREVET BRIGADIER GENERAL ALEXANDER,
Commanding Second Brigade, Fourth Division, C. C. M. D. M.

INDORSEMENT.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND BRIGADE, FOURTH DIVISION, C. C. M. D. M.
East Macon, Ga., April 25, 1865.

Respectfully forwarded. It is with great pleasure I endorse every word Colonel Young says about the gallantry and good conduct of his regiment. Braver soldiers never drew a saber.

[Signed] A. J. ALEXANDER,
Brevet Brigadier General, Commanding.

Official: A. N. CANFIELD, *Lieutenant and Acting Adjutant Fifth Iowa Cavalry.*¹¹

¹⁰The records of the Adjutant General's Office show that the Fifth Iowa Cavalry participated in the battle at Selma, Ala., April 1, 1865, but sustained no loss. No reference is made in the report of Colonel Young of the regiment being in that battle, and the compiler finds no further official reference to it than that above stated. As the battle of Ebenezer Church was fought on April 1, 1865, it would seem that Colonel Young should at least have mentioned the fact that his regiment was at Selma on the day following, even if it had taken no important part in the battle. For this reason the compiler makes mention of the notation found in the official record, which may or may not have been an error.

The loss of the regiment in this—its last raid—was eleven men, killed and wounded. On the march from Columbus to Macon intelligence of the cessation of hostilities was received. The regiment went into camp at Macon. After the capture of Jefferson Davis, Colonel Young, in command of detachments from the Fifth Iowa and the Seventh Ohio Cavalry, marched as a guard to the ex-President of the Confederacy, his family, and the rebel officers who had been captured with him, to Augusta. On his return march, Colonel Young took possession of the books and assets of the Bank of Tennessee. The assets consisted of $8,000,000 of Federal money, including nearly $1,000,000 in gold and silver, which was turned over to the Government of the United States upon the arrival of the command at Atlanta. The Fifth Iowa Cavalry was stationed at Atlanta until about the first of July, when it moved to Nashville, and thence to Macon, Ga. About the last of the month it returned to Nashville, where, on the 11th of August, 1865, it was mustered out of the service of the United States. The regiment was then furnished with transportation to Clinton, Iowa, and, upon its arrival there, was disbanded and the officers and men returned to their homes, there to resume the duties of citizens of the country they had fought to save.

The States of Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska and Missouri were all honored by the service of this splendid regiment, but, from the date it was assigned to the State of Iowa and officially designated as an Iowa regiment, it became the duty of the Adjutant General of this State to keep the record of its operations and achievements. From that record, and from such other information as could be deemed reliable and authentic, this historical sketch has been compiled. The regiment occupies an honorable place in the history of the War of the Rebellion. Its surviving members and their posterity can well entertain a feeling of pride in the record of its heroic service. When the last member of the regiment shall have answered the final roll call and joined his comrades "on Fame's eternal camping ground," a grateful people will cherish the memory of the brave men who, through storm and sunshine, on the march, in bivouac, and battle, amid all the dangers and hardships that beset the life of the soldier, remained true and loyal to their flag and country and, by their valor, saved the Government of the United States from disruption and destruction.

Sixth Regiment

Iowa Volunteer Cavalry

SIXTH REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER CAVALRY

The Sixth Regiment of Iowa Cavalry was organized under a special order of the War Department, dated September 9, 1862. The twelve companies of which the regiment was composed were ordered into quarters by the Governor, on dates ranging from about the 1st of November, 1862, to near the last of February, 1863. The rendezvous designated in the order was Camp Hendershott, near Davenport, Iowa, where the companies were mustered into the service of the United States, by Captain H. B. Hendershott, of the Regular Army, on dates ranging from January 31 to March 5, 1863. Upon the muster in of the last company the regiment had an aggregate strength of 1,125, rank and file. Subsequent enlistments and transfers increased the number to the total enrollment shown at the close of this historical sketch, but the number at the muster in of the regiment is included in the original roster.¹ In the subjoined roster, the name of every officer and enlisted man, who at any time belonged to the regiment, will be found, with his personal record of service, in the paragraph opposite his name. These records have been transcribed from the books in the office of the Adjutant General of Iowa, supplemented by such additional information as could be obtained from the records of the War Department, when the State records were found to be incomplete. There may be some cases in which names are not correctly spelled, and others in which errors and omissions have occurred, but every effort has been made to secure accuracy, and to make each personal record as complete as it could be made from the official archives of the State, and the Government at Washington. In like manner the material for this historical sketch has been obtained. The official reports of regimental commanders, and those of the General under whose command they served, have been carefully consulted, and extracts from the reports, together with other official data, constitute the principal portion of this condensed history. Limitation of space has compelled the omission of many interesting details, but the leading events which occurred during the most active period of the service of the regiment have been given the largest amount of space. It has been the aim of the compiler to demonstrate clearly the importance of the service rendered to the inhabitants of the northern frontier, for the protection of whom the regiment was organized, at the time when the resources of the Government were taxed to the utmost by the great War of the Rebellion, then in progress. Prior to the commencement of that war the troops of the Regular Army had been mainly employed on the northern and western frontiers, for the purpose of keeping the various Indian tribes in subjection and confining them within the limits of the reservations to which they had been assigned. During the war the Indians had taken advantage of the inability of the Government to supply the necessary number of regular troops to protect the settlers upon the frontier, and hence came the necessity of organizing regiments of volunteers for that purpose. The character of the service was such as to involve great hardship and suffering, particularly in the winter season of the year.

¹Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1863, Vol. 1, page 12; Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1863, Vol. 2, pages 609 to 646.

The situation upon the northern border of the State of Iowa, at the time of the breaking out of Indian hostilities, in the autumn of 1862 and winter and spring of 1862-3, is described in the exhaustive report of S. R. Ingham, to Governor Kirkwood, also the reports of Lieutenant Colonel James A. Sawyer, commanding the Northwest Frontier Forces, and other official reports of the same general character.² These reports describe with great particularity of detail the alarming conditions that existed, the preparations for defense that had been made and were being made, in the way of the erection of forts, block houses, quarters for the soldiers, stables for the horses, and supplies of provisions and forage. The names of the different tribes of Indians, their location and numbers and the location of the white settlers are also given. An extract from the report of George L. Davenport to Governor Kirkwood will suffice to show the necessity for placing a large force of cavalry—the only effective troops for active operations against Indians—along the northern frontier:

. . . . Upon my arrival at St. Paul, I called on Governor Ramsey, who gave me all the information in his power. He informed me that the outbreak with the Sioux Indians is of the most serious character, and the massacre of men, women and children of the frontier settlements, the largest known in the history of the country. Nearly six hundred persons are known to be killed, and over one hundred women and children are in the hands of the savages as prisoners. The Indians are very bold and defiant, repeatedly attacking the forts and the troops sent out against them. They have plundered many stores and farm houses, and have driven off a very large number of cattle and horses. The Indians continue to attack the settlements almost every week, keeping up a constant alarm among the people. It is estimated that over five thousand persons have left their homes and all their property, causing immense loss and suffering. Governor Ramsey informs me that he will have, in a short time, to operate against the Indians, about four thousand troops,—one thousand of cavalry,—as soon as horses can be obtained. Parties have been sent out to cut large quantities of hay, at various points on the frontier, for the use of the cavalry during the winter. It is also proposed to erect stockade forts, at a short distance apart, along a frontier of two hundred miles, and garrison them with forty or fifty men each. This it is supposed will induce many to return to their farms, and feel that they are protected, and in case of alarm have a place to fly to. I am much alarmed in regard to the safety of the settlement on the northwestern border of our State. I think they are in imminent danger of an attack at any moment, and will be in constant alarm and danger during the coming winter. As the Indians are driven back from the eastern part of Minnesota, they will fall back towards the Missouri slope, and will make inroads upon our settlements for supplies of food and plunder. . . .

It will thus be seen that the States of Iowa and Minnesota had a no less common cause, in the protection of their citizens upon their northern frontiers, than in furnishing troops, upon the call of the President, for the purpose of suppressing treason and rebellion against the general Government in the South. Both States had nobly responded to every call, and on all battlefields of the South their loyal sons had been in the thickest of the fight and had won imperishable honor. They now responded to the call of their Governors, asking them to go to the defense of the helpless settlers and save them from the ravages of the savage and relentless Indians. Into that field of warfare the Sixth Iowa Cavalry was sent soon after the completion of its organization. Most of the companies were in rendezvous a sufficient length of time to enable them to become fairly well drilled and disciplined. Colonel Wilson and the other field and company officers had exerted themselves to put the regiment in the best possible state of efficiency before leaving the State. It was well mounted and armed, and an inspection of its roster shows that the average age of the men was considerably greater than that of the majority of the Iowa regiments which had preceded it. Very many of the officers and men had wives and children, and had answered the call to go to the aid of the helpless settlers upon the border, in response to that feeling of sympathy born of their affection for their own families.

The regiment left its camp at Davenport on the 16th of March, 1863, and marched across the State of Iowa to Sioux City, where it arrived on the 26th of April. This long march was made over bad roads and, for the greater portion of the way, in stormy weather, but it was a good preliminary experience and prepared the men for the greater privations and hardships they were later called upon to endure. Upon the arrival of the regiment at Sioux City, Colonel Wilson reported to Brigadier General John Cook, commanding the military district of Iowa and Dakota, and was ordered to cross the Sioux River and go into camp, until the preparations for an active campaign against the Indians—who were then upon the war path—could be completed. Two expeditions were being fitted out; one to move up the east bank of the Missouri River, the other to move westward from Minnesota into the Indian country, the two expeditionary forces to endeavor to form a junction at some point on the upper Missouri. While these preparations were being made, intelligence was received that a large band of Indians was moving in the direction of Fort Randall, evidently with the intention of attacking the fort. As the garrison was considered too small to withstand the attack of so large a force, General Cook ordered a battalion of the Sixth Iowa Cavalry, under command of Major TenBroeck, to proceed immediately to Fort Randall and reinforce the garrison. On the 22d of May another battalion of the regiment, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Pollock, with Major Shephard as second in command, was ordered to proceed to Fort Randall and, upon his arrival there, to take command of the combined forces and assume the offensive against the Indians. a large body of whom were at that time encamped near the fort. Upon the approach of this additional reinforcement, the Indians broke up their encampment and fled toward the north. Lieutenant Colonel Pollock sent out detachments to scour the country and watch the movements of the Indians until the balance of the troops, under General Cook, should arrive.

Near the end of May the battalion, under command of Major TenBroeck, was ordered to march to Fort Pierre, on the Missouri River, about two hundred miles from Fort Randall, at which point troops were being concentrated for further aggressive movements against the Indians, who had thus far managed to avoid coming into conflict with the forces sent against them. Early in June, General Cook was relieved of his command by General Sully, who was a trained Indian fighter. General Sully established his base of supplies at Fort Pierre, and, as soon as all the troops which were available for that purpose could be concentrated, began his expedition toward the uninhabited region to which the Indians had fled with the evident purpose of drawing him as far away from his base of supplies as possible, before they would make a stand and risk a conflict with his troops. The details as to the preparations made and the movements of the troops after the march began are given with much particularity in the official reports, but, as the battle with the Indians, which followed later, and in which the Sixth Iowa Cavalry took a conspicuous part, is the subject of the greatest importance, only such details need to be given as will give an intelligent idea of the events and movements which led up to and immediately preceded the battle of White Stone Hill. In his official report, sent from his camp at the mouth of the Little Cheyenne River, under date of September 11, 1863, General Sully refers to his previous report of August 16, 1863, and says that his movements had been so rapid, and the danger of sending any communication so great, that he had found it advisable to defer doing so. He then describes the movements of his command subsequent to his last report. Portions of his report are here quoted, as follows:

On the morning of August 19, the steamer I was waiting for, with supplies, finally arrived. She was immediately unloaded, and all the baggage of the officers and men of the command was sent down by her to the depot at Fort Pierre, together with every man who was in the least sick or not well mounted. By this I reduced my force considerably, and was unable to transport, with the wretched mules that had been furnished me, about twenty-three days' rations and forage enough to keep these transportation animals alive, depending on grass I might find to feed the cavalry and artillery horses. Luckily, I found the grazing north in much better condition than I had dared to hope for. On the 20th we were visited by one of the most terrific rain and hail storms I have ever seen. This stampeded some of my animals and a few were lost—they swam the Missouri—and it also destroyed a quantity of my rations in the wagons, thereby causing me some delay in the march; but I succeeded in getting off on the afternoon of the 21st, and marched up the Little Cheyenne about eleven miles, the road being very heavy. . . .

General Sully continues his description of the march and the country over which his command was passing, but records no event of special importance until the 24th, on which date the troops came into the buffalo country. Hunting parties were sent out and succeeded in killing many buffaloes; they also reported coming in sight of Indians. Two days later, a small scouting party captured two Indian squaws and some children. The squaws said they were on their way to the Crow Creek Agency, but were alone. The scouts, however, had found tracks of a large number of Indians, all going up the Missouri. As the march continued, signs of Indians having passed along the route were daily discovered. An old Indian was captured who reported that General Sibley's command had fought the Indians, fifty miles farther north, some weeks before, had been defeated by them, and was compelled to retreat to James River; that the Indians had pursued General Sibley's troops for a long distance, and had several fights with them, but that they had given up the pursuit and gone back to the north. The old Indian also said that on their way back the Indians had attacked a Mackinaw boat on the river, had killed all on board—twenty-one men, three women and some children—and had then sunk the boat. The report was so much in keeping with the Indian mode of warfare that, although it came from an Indian, was very likely to prove as a whole or in part correct. The Indians were expected to make a stand and fight, as they were now beyond their favorite hunting grounds, and would not be likely to retreat to a much greater distance. Scouting parties were out in advance every day. The Sixth Iowa Cavalry performed its full share of scouting duty. A detachment of two companies from the regiment, under command of Captain Cram, made one of the longest and most important scouts that was performed on the march. Each day evidence accumulated, showing that a large force of Indians was slowly falling back before the advance of General Sully's command, and that a battle was impending, unless the Indians should send messengers with offers to surrender without a fight, and return to their reservations. They were in too strong force, however, to make an offer to surrender probable. Continuing his report General Sully says:

On the 3d of September we reached a lake, where, on the plains near by, were the remains of a very large number of buffalo, some of which had been killed quite recently. Here I encamped to await the reports of the commands I had out during the march, who every day discovered fresh signs of Indians, their lodge trails spread over the country, but all moving towards a point known to be a favorite haunt of the Indians. I had this day detached one battalion of the Sixth Iowa, Major House commanding, and Mr. Frank LaFromboise as guide, to keep ahead of me five miles, and, in case they saw a small band of Indians, to attack them or take them prisoners. If they should find a large band, too large to successfully cope with, to watch the camp at a distance and send word back to me, my intention being to leave my train under charge of a heavy guard, move up in the night time, and attack them at daybreak. But, for some reason satisfactory to the guide, he bore off much to my left, and came upon the Indians in an encampment of over four hundred lodges—some say six hundred—in ravines where they felt perfectly secure, being fully persuaded that I was still on my way up the Missouri. This is what the Indian prisoners say. They also stated that a war party followed me on my way up, in hopes of stampeding me; but this they could not do. I marched with great care, with an advance guard and flankers; the trains in two lines sixty paces apart, the troops on each side; in front and center myself with one company and the battery; all loose stock was kept between the lines of the wagons. In this way I lost no animals on the campaign, except about a dozen that got out of camp at night. Nor did the Indians, during all the trip, ever attack me or try to stampede me. Major House, according to my instructions, endeavored to surround and keep in the Indians until word could be sent me; but this was an impossibility with his 300 men, as the encampment was very large, mustering at least 1,200 warriors. This number is what the Indians say they had; but I, as well as everybody in the command, say over 1,500. These Indians were partly Santees, Cutheads, Yanktonais, and some Blackfeet, and, as I have since learned, Unkpa-pas, the same party who fought General Sibley and destroyed the Mackinaw boat. Of this I have unmistakable proof from letters and papers found in the camp, and on the persons of some of the Indians, besides relics of the Minnesota massacre; also from the fact that they told Mr. LaFromboise, the guide, when he was surrounded by about 200 of them, that "they had fought General Sibley, and they could not see why the whites wanted to come to fight them unless they were tired of living and wanted to die." Mr. LaFromboise succeeded in getting away from them after some difficulty, and ran his horse a distance of more than ten miles to give me information, Major House, with his command, still remaining there. He reached me a little after 4 o'clock. I immediately turned out my command. The horses at the time were out grazing. At the sound of the bugle the men rushed with a cheer, and in a very few minutes saddled up and were in line. I left four companies and all the men who were poorly mounted in the camp, with orders to strike the tents and corral all the wagons, and, starting off, with the Second Nebraska on the right, the Sixth Iowa on the left, one company of the Seventh Iowa and the battery in the center, at a full gallop, we made the distance of over ten miles in much less than an hour.

On reaching near the ground I found the enemy were leaving, and carrying off what plunder they could. Many lodges, however, were still standing. I ordered Colonel Furnas, Second Nebraska, to push his horses to the utmost, so as to reach the camp and assist Major House in keeping the Indians corralled. This order was obeyed with great alacrity, the regiment going over the plains at a full run. I was close upon the rear of the regiment with the Sixth Iowa. The Second Nebraska took to the right of the camp, and was soon lost in a cloud of dust over the hills. I ordered Colonel Wilson, Sixth Iowa, to take the left; while I, with the battery, one company of the Seventh Iowa, Captain Millard, and two companies of the Sixth Iowa, Major TenBroeck commanding, charged through the center of the encampment. I found here an Indian Chief, by the name of Little Soldier, with some few of his people. This Indian has always had the reputation of being a "good Indian" and friendly. I placed them under guard and moved on. Shortly after I met with the notorious chief, Big Head, and some of his men. They were dressed for a fight, but my men cut them off. These Indians, together with some of their warriors, mustering about 30, together with squaws and children, numbering in all over 120, gave themselves up. About the same time firing began about half a mile ahead, and was kept up, becoming more and more brisk until it was quite a considerable engagement. A report was brought to me (which proved to be false) that the Indians were driving back some of my command. I immediately took possession of the hillocks near by, forming line and placing the battery in the center on a higher knoll. At this time night had about set in, but still the engagement was briskly kept up and in the melee it was hard to distinguish my line from that of the enemy. The Indians made a very desperate resistance, but finally broke and fled, pursued in every direction by bodies of my troops. I would here state that the troops, though mounted, were armed with rifles, and, according to my orders, most of them dismounted and fought on foot until the enemy broke, when they remounted and went in pursuit. It is to be regretted that I could not have had an hour or two more of daylight, for I feel sure, if I had, I could have annihilated the enemy. As it was, I believe I can safely say I gave them one of the most severe punishments that Indians have ever received. After night set in, the engagement was of such a promiscuous nature that it was hard to tell what results would happen; I therefore ordered all the buglers to sound the "rally" and, building large fires, remained under arms during the night, collecting together my troops.

The next morning early (September 4th), I established my camp on the battlefield, the wagon train, under charge of Major Pearman, Second Nebraska, having in the night been ordered to join me, and sent out strong scouting parties in different directions to scour the country and to overtake what Indians they could; but in this they were not very successful, though some of them had slight skirmishes. . . . They found the dead and wounded in all directions, some miles from the battlefield; also immense quantities of provisions, baggage, etc. . . . One party that I sent out went near the James River, and found there eleven dead Indians. The deserted camp of the Indians, together with the country around it, was covered with their plunder. I devoted this day, together with the following (the 5th), to destroying all this property, still scouring the country. . . . A very large number of ponies were found dead and wounded on the field; besides a large number were captured. The prisoners (some 130) I take with me below, and shall report to you more especially in regard to them.³

The remaining portion of General Sully's report gives very full details as to the casualties among the Indians and to his own command, both in the battle and in the subsequent skirmishes in which his scouting parties were engaged; describes the hardships endured upon the return march and every incident which he considered worthy of note; but, for the purpose of this history, it is briefly condensed as follows:

One of his scouting parties fell into an ambuscade and lost four men killed by the Indians. Another detachment was sent out and succeeded in overtaking and killing three of the Indians. One hundred dead Indians were found. The officers and guides estimated the total number of Indians killed at 150. The hill near which the engagement took place was called by the Indians "Whitestone," hence the battle was officially designated "White Stone Hill." The conduct of the troops under his command is highly commended by the General. He states that the official reports of Colonel Wilson of the Sixth Iowa, and Colonel Furnas of the Second Nebraska, accompany his own, and highly commends both for their bravery and cheerful obedience to his orders, and makes mention of the fact that both these officers had their horses shot under them. Upon the return to Fort Pierre, his command made rapid marches, the rations being barely sufficient to enable them to reach the fort. The horses were almost entirely worn out on the march. The command reached the mouth of the Little Cheyenne River on the 11th of September, and found the steamboat which General Sully had previously ordered to be there to meet him on his return. Had the boat—which was loaded with provisions for the men and grain for the animals—failed to reach the place designated, the train could not have been taken through to Fort Pierre, as the grass was then about all gone. The wounded men were placed on the boat, and a part of the empty wagons, thus relieving the worn out mules and enabling them to haul the remaining wagons to the fort. The loss of both horses and mules on the return march had been heavy. As fast as they gave out they were killed, to prevent them from falling into the hands of the Indians. By actual count the number of Indian prisoners was 156—32 men and 124 women and children. General Sully had between 600 and 700 men actually engaged in the battle of White Stone Hill, of whom 20 were killed and 38 wounded. Of this number, 22 were of the Sixth Iowa, as shown in the official report of Colonel Wilson, which describes in detail the conduct of his regiment, and is here given in part as follows:

ON BATTLEFIELD OF WHITE STONE HILL.
September 3, 1863.

Sir: I have the honor to submit to you an account of the participation of the Sixth Iowa Cavalry in the battle of White Stone Hill, on the 3d day of September, 1863. As you are aware, the command left the mouth of the Big Cheyenne on the 21st day of August last. Nothing occurred to vary the monotony of the usual hard marches until the above date. On the morning of that day I received an order from you to detail from my command one battalion. It being the turn of the Third Battalion to scout, an order was issued directing Major A. E. House to report to your headquarters for instructions, which was promptly done. Company M, commanded by Captain V. J. Williams, of said battalion, having their horses used up by constant scouting, was unable to proceed with the detail, its place being supplied by Company H, of the Second Battalion. The detail for the scout was Company C, L. A. Ainsworth, Captain; Company I, L. R. Wolfe, Captain; Company F, S. Shattuck, Captain, and Company H, of the Second Battalion, C. J. Marsh, Captain. In speaking of the Third Battalion, I always include Company H in it in this battle. They left the command at an early hour. After the departure of the battalion, the brigade took up its line of march to a point ten miles east of this place, where we arrived about 2 o'clock P. M. In the space of two hours, the messenger dispatched by Major House rode swiftly into camp, with the information that there was a very large body of Indians near him, and that he was in process of negotiation with them, until we could arrive. It was but the work of a few minutes for the whole command to be upon its way to the battlefield. The ten miles distance was quickly passed. When we neared the battlefield, I received an order from you, directing me to take one of my battalions in addition to the Third. The First was taken by me, and the Second was left with brigade headquarters. I then proceeded to carry out your orders to surround the Indians and drive them in. On every side of the battlefield were straggling Indians, endeavoring to escape. Immediately joining the flank of the First upon the Second Battalion, and marching both in line, we succeeded in driving a large portion of the Indians toward your headquarters down into a ravine. By the shifting and dressing of the line as it marched, I became detached from the First, and was thrown into the Third Battalion. The Indians, after having been driven quietly for quite a distance, into a common center, availed themselves of the darkness that was coming, by suddenly firing upon us, which fire, though entirely unexpected, was immediately returned by us with terrible effect. We then commenced making preparations to fight on foot, when the darkness became so impenetrable that it was impossible to proceed further. It was at this fire of the enemy, when riding some little distance in advance of the battalion, that my horse was shot and fatally wounded with a slug; he lived long enough to carry me about thirty rods. After the darkness set in we went into camp immediately on the battlefield, corralled our horses and threw out pickets, while the command slept upon its arms. The night was excessively dark and cold. The picket guard killed two Indians that were found straggling near our camp. At length the day appeared, when we found that the enemy, availing themselves of the darkness, had suddenly decamped, but leaving the country strewed for miles around with their dried meats, provisions, packs; robes, tepees and ponies. We lost in this engagement one commissioned officer and ten privates killed, and had eleven wounded, one of them since dying, some of the rest being badly wounded and some very slightly. . . . I wish to call to your particular attention every one of the field and line officers of the regiment without enumerating them by name. From the highest to the lowest they deserve the most favorable consideration; and the same may be said of almost the entire command engaged. Being their first battle, this was their baptism of fire and steel, and most nobly did they behave. The high reputation earned by the noble action of the Iowa troops upon the bloody fields of battle has not been tarnished by the gallant Sixth Iowa, at White Stone Hill.

I have the honor to be

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. S. WILSON,

Colonel Sixth Iowa Cavalry.

CAPTAIN J. H. PELL, A. A. G.*

It may be inferred that General Sully had instructions to surround the Indians and, if possible, secure their surrender without a fight, although he does not say that he had such instructions, in his report. The statement that the guide, Frank La Fromboise, was "surrounded by about two hundred of the Indians, from whom he succeeded in getting away after some difficulty," plainly indicates that he was holding a conference with them, and endeavoring to persuade them to give up their arms and return peaceably to their reservations, and that he could not have been allowed to return to General Sully, unless it was for the purpose of conveying a message from the Indians, which was probably of such a character that it caused the General to consider further negotiations useless. In the subsequent movement of his troops against the Indians it will be observed that the advance continued with the purpose of surrounding the Indians, who opened fire just as darkness was coming on. If the movement to surround them had been successful, it seems most likely that another opportunity would have been given them to surrender without a conflict. The inference is strengthened by the report of Colonel Wilson, in which he states that, at the time Major House sent his message to General Sully, advising him of the discovery of the Indian encampment, he was in process of negotiating with them for the purpose of holding them in check until the General could arrive with the rest of his command, and by his further statement that the Indians had been driven "quietly" for quite a distance towards a common center, and, when they suddenly opened fire upon his troops, it was "entirely unexpected." The question whether such an inference is justified by the facts is involved in doubt, by the previous statement in General Sully's report, that he intended to surround the camp of the Indians during the night and attack them at daylight. In any event, the punishment inflicted upon the Indians was well deserved, and was not even adequate, when compared with the terrible massacres of men, women and children, of which they had been guilty.

In obedience to his orders to select an eligible location for the building of another fort, General Sully selected a site on the east bank of the Missouri River, about fifteen miles below Fort Pierre. The work of constructing the fort was begun by the Sixth Iowa Cavalry, but, before its completion, General Sully—leaving Lieutenant Colonel Pollock with five companies of the Sixth Iowa to finish the work and to remain as a garrison for the fort—marched with the rest of his command to Fort Randall, and thence to Sioux City. The detachment of the Sixth Iowa completed the construction of the fort, which was officially designated as "Fort Sully," in honor of the distinguished soldier who was in command of all the troops then engaged in the defense of the northern frontier. As active operations against the Indians could not be undertaken and prosecuted during the severe winter which followed, the troops were compelled to remain idle in their winter quarters until the opening of spring. The report of Major General John Pope, commanding the Department of the Northwest, fully describes the conditions that existed on the frontier at the beginning of the next campaign and the subsequent operations against the Indians. A portion of his report is here given, which will serve to show the magnitude of the campaign, and the important results accomplished:

The operations of last year ended with such defeats of the Indians occupying the vast regions east of the Missouri River as forced them for a time to take refuge in the British possessions, and relieved the entire frontier settlements of Minnesota, Iowa and Dakota from any danger of Indian hostilities. During last winter, however, the whole Dakota Nation, from the Rocky Mountains to the Minnesota frontier, and from the Platte River and the Iowa line to the British possessions on the north, succeeded in combining their various and scattered tribes for a final effort against the whites, and by the opening of spring had slowly concentrated their whole force on and near the Upper Missouri, to resist the navigation of the Missouri River, prevent the passage of emigrants across the great plains, and to deliver, with their combined forces, a final battle against the United States troops under General Sully. This Indian force was then estimated by competent authorities, and so reported by me to the War Department early in the spring, at about 6,000 warriors, and this estimate was subsequently confirmed by General Sully, after his battles with them near the Little Missouri. It was also reported at the time, and has been confirmed since by undoubted testimony, that ammunition and other necessary supplies were brought to the Indian camps during the winter, by half-breeds and traders from the British settlements on the Red River of the North. It is hardly necessary for me to repeat what I have so often reported, that Indian hostilities in this Department have been fomented and encouraged, and the Indians supplied with means to continue the war, by the half-breeds and other British subjects of the Selkirk settlements. . . .

As I felt sure that if once their entire force of warriors could be met and defeated, this Indian war in the North-west, on any considerable scale, would be closed, preparations for an active campaign, during the summer of 1864, were made during the close of last winter. The plan of operations consisted of putting into the field, under the command of Brigadier General Alfred Sully, an active column of about 2,500 men, entirely cavalry, to advance against the Indians, wherever they could be found, and deliver battle with them, and at the same time to follow up the movements of this force with detachments of infantry, large enough to establish strong posts in the Indian country. These posts were so located as to cover the frontiers of Iowa and Minnesota and the frontier settlements of Dakota Territory at a long distance; to interpose between the different tribes so as to prevent concerted action; to command the hunting grounds of the Indians so that they would be constantly under the supervision of the military forces, which, by concerted action, could easily and promptly march a heavy force of cavalry upon any portion of the region in which the Indians are obliged to hunt for subsistence; to command the Indian trails toward the frontier settlements, so as to detect the passage of even the smallest parties, attempting to make raids upon the settlers, and to follow them up, and, so far as military necessities would allow, to protect an emigrant route from the Upper Mississippi River to the territories of Idaho and Montana. The details of this plan of operation were submitted to you, and approved in February last, and immediate preparations made to carry them into execution. General Sully collected the forces under his command from the various posts and stations in his district early in the spring, and commenced to move up the Missouri River, leaving only such detachments as were necessary to cover the frontier from small Indian raids during his absence. He was re-enforced by about 1,500 mounted men from Minnesota, leaving General Sibley with about 700 effective men to protect the frontier settlements of Minnesota during the summer. The mouth of Burdache Creek, on the Upper Missouri, was selected as the point where the Minnesota troops should join the forces of General Sully moving up the Missouri, and the junction of these forces was made on the 30th of June. The spring rise in the Missouri River did not come down until very late in the season, and General Sully only reached the mouth of Cannon Ball River, at which point he was to establish a strong post, which was to be his depot of supplies, on the 7th of July. He established Fort Rice at that point, distant from Sioux City 450 miles, and garrisoned it with five companies of the Thirtieth Wisconsin Volunteers. The Indians, who had been concentrated on and near the Missouri River, about 50 miles above this post, had meantime crossed to the southwest side of the river, and occupied a strong position in a very difficult country near the Little Missouri River, due west and about 200 miles from Fort Rice. On the 26th of July, General Sully marched upon these Indians with the following forces: Eighth Minnesota Volunteers (mounted) and six companies of the Second Minnesota Cavalry, with four light guns, eleven companies Sixth Iowa Cavalry,⁵ three companies Seventh Iowa Cavalry, two companies Dakota Cavalry, four companies Brackett's Battalion Cavalry, one small company of Scouts, and four mounted howitzers, numbering in all 2,200 men.

General Pope, in continuing his report, describes the subsequent movements of the troops, prior to and during the battle with the Indians which ensued. His report covers a large amount of space, and includes an extract from the official report of General Sully, which gives an interesting description of the country which was covered by the expedition. The entire report gives many interesting details in connection with the history of the campaign and the proper manner of dealing with the Indians in order to prevent future trouble with them,⁶ but, for the purpose of this history, the compiler is again compelled to condense such portions of the report as apply exclusively to the concluding military operations.

General Sully marched with his command to the head of Heart River, where he corralled his trains and, leaving a sufficient guard with them, marched rapidly toward the northwest until he reached the point where the combined forces of the Indians were assembled. On the morning of July 28, 1864, he found, confronting his command of about 2,000 men, 6,000 Indian warriors, strongly posted in a wooded country, cut up with rugged hills and deep ravines. Under a flag of truce he advanced toward the position of the Indians and invited a conference with them. The leading chiefs came out to meet him, and he had an hour's talk with them. They were very defiant and refused to consider the terms of surrender to the authority of the Government which the General offered them, and, finding his efforts to prevent bloodshed of no avail, the conference was ended, and orders were given to the troops to get into position for battle. The artillery opened the engagement, the troops advancing and firing rapidly. For a time the engagement was sharp and severe, but the superior range and destructiveness of the troopers' arms and the deadly fire of the artillery proved to be more than a match for the Indians, notwithstanding their having so great an apparent advantage in numbers. They were steadily driven back to their extensive camps and compelled to abandon them, together with the winter supply of provisions which they had long been engaged in collecting, and all their property of every description. A running fight of nine miles ensued, the Indians finally scattering and escaping with nothing except their wounded, whom, according to the Indian custom, they carried with them, and also as many of their dead as they could. One hundred twenty-five dead warriors were left upon the field. The part taken in this battle by the Sixth Iowa Cavalry is described in the official report of Lieutenant Colonel Pollock;⁷ also that of other engagements with the Indians in which the regiment participated, on the 8th and 9th of August, 1864, while the expedition was on the return march. The regiment had performed its full share in all the operations of General Sully's command. The General highly commended the officers and men of the regiment for their faithful and efficient service, in conjunction with the other troops under his command, in winning such a complete and decisive victory over the combined Indian tribes.

The command reached the Yellow Stone River on the 12th of August, and there found a couple of small steamers loaded with rations. With the aid of the steamers the little army with its train crossed the river, and moved up to Fort Union on the Missouri River. Remaining there for a short time, the army crossed the river and marched down to Fort Berthold. Leaving one company of the Sixth Iowa, under command of Captain Moreland, to garrison the post, General Sully again marched north with the rest of his command in pursuit of a band of Indians, who were reported to be again upon the war path, but did not succeed in overtaking them. The army then returned to Fort Rice, arriving there on the 9th of September. The active campaigning of the regiment was now mostly over for the summer. A large emigrant train was reported to be having trouble with the Indians, and a detachment of one hundred men of the Sixth Iowa, Captain D. F. Eicher commanding, joined a considerable force, made up of detachments from other regiments, and marched to the relief of the train. Upon the approach of the troops, the Indians rapidly retreated toward the north. These troops returned to Fort Rice after an absence of three weeks. Small bands of Indians were still lurking in the surrounding country, and scouting parties were sent after them until they were finally broken up and dispersed. In one of these encounters with the Indians, September 21, 1864, Sergeant Alfred Murphy, of Company L, Sixth Iowa Cavalry, was killed, and in another, September 27th, Sanford Murphy, of Company E, was killed, both in the vicinity of Fort Rice.⁸

During the winter the regiment was widely scattered, detachments having winter quarters at Fort Randall, Sioux City, Yankton, at the Sioux and Winnebago Indian Agency and at Fort Berthold. The official reports do not show any active operations of the regiment against the Indians during the spring and summer of 1865. The Indians seemed to have realized that the great War of the Rebellion was over, and that the Government could send any number of troops that might be requisite to quickly suppress further outbreaks, and so, for a time at least, those savage wards of the nation became comparatively quiet. The Sixth Iowa Cavalry was retained in the service, however, during the summer and part of the autumn, when troops of the Regular Army took the place of the volunteers, and the regiment was assembled at Sioux City, at which place it was mustered out of the service of the United States, on the 17th of October, 1865. It then proceeded to Davenport, Iowa, and was there disbanded.

The Sixth Iowa Cavalry spent more than two years and a half upon the northern frontier, a considerable part of the time engaged in active operations against a barbarous and treacherous foe. Its officers and men endured great privations and displayed true heroism in their conflicts with the Indians. A great part of the country over which they marched and fought is now occupied by a happy and prosperous people, and the remnants of the once powerful Indian tribes are now living quietly and peaceably upon the reservations which the Government has established for them. The descendants of the hardy pioneer settlers of the Northwest will hold in grateful remembrance the brave sons of Iowa, who went forth from their homes and drove the relentless savages from the scenes of their brutal massacres to the desolate regions of the North.

Seventh Regiment

Iowa Volunteer Cavalry

SEVENTH REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER CAVALRY

The Seventh Iowa Cavalry was organized under special authority of the War Department, for the purpose of assisting in the defense of the western and northern frontier settlements against the hostile Indians tribes. The Government had previously employed the troops of the Regular Army for that purpose, but the greater part of those troops were then engaged with the armies in the South, in contending against the armed forces of treason and rebellion. Therefore, in addition to the large number of regiments which the State of Iowa had already sent into the field, her loyal sons were called upon to volunteer for the protection of the pioneer settlers upon the frontiers. The organization of the regiment proceeded slowly. The first company was ordered into quarters by the Governor on November 5, 1862. Davenport, Iowa, was designated as the rendezvous of the regiment, and there, on dates ranging from April 27 to July 13, 1863, eight companies—A to H inclusive—were mustered into the service of the United States, by Lieutenant Colonel William N. Grier, of the Regular Army. Company I was added, by transfer of the Sioux City Cavalry, an independent company, which had been mustered into the service at Sioux City, November 14, 1861, and had been long engaged in service on the frontier. Companies K, L and M were added, by transfer of Companies A, B and C, of the Forty-first Iowa Infantry, originally enrolled with the Fourteenth Iowa Infantry and mustered into the service at Iowa City, October 23, 1861. These companies had also been engaged in service on the frontier, and were in garrison at Fort Randall, Dakota Territory, at the time of their transfer to the Seventh Cavalry. The organization of the regiment was thus completed on July 25, 1863. The four companies transferred were a valuable acquisition, on account of their long experience on the frontier and their knowledge of the character of the Indians and their methods of warfare.

On the 27th of July, 1863, six companies of the regiment, under command of Major H. H. Heath, marched from the rendezvous at Davenport, under orders to report to General McKean, commanding the District of Nebraska, Department of Missouri, with headquarters at Omaha. Upon their arrival at Omaha, these companies were assigned to different posts in Nebraska Territory. On the 5th of September the remaining companies marched to Omaha, where the headquarters of the regiment were established. The principal operations of the regiment were performed by detachments, scattered over a wide extent of territory, and for that reason a connected history of the regiment as a whole cannot be given. From historical memoranda furnished the Adjutant General of Iowa, by Major George M. O'Brien,¹ and from official reports of battles with the Indians, which will hereafter be referred to, the compiler will endeavor to give a condensed account of the leading events which marked the long period of service covered by the regiment.

The Seventh Iowa Cavalry had, at the completion of its organization, an aggregate strength of 1,096 men. Subsequent enlistments increased the number to the total enrollment as shown at the close of this historical sketch. All casualties are noted in the subjoined roster, together with the personal record of service of each officer and enlisted man. From the time regimental headquarters were established and the companies were assigned to their various posts, they were engaged in escorting trains, protecting emigrants, guarding lines of travel, scouting through the country and watching the movements of the Indians. They had numerous conflicts with the Indians. Portions of the regiment were engaged in the battles of Horse Creek, White Stone Hill, Tahkahokutah, Bad Lands, Little Blue, Julesburg, Mud Springs and Rush Creek, besides several less important affairs. Limitation of space will not permit quotation of the official reports of all these engagements, but, as typical of the treacherous character of the Indians and the desperate situation in which these small detachments were frequently placed, the entire report of Captain John Wilcox is here given:

HEADQUARTERS DETACHMENT SEVENTH IOWA CAVALRY,
IN FIELD NEAR JULESBURG, C. T., June 21, 1865.

CAPTAIN:—I have the honor to report that, in compliance with special orders from Major Mackey, commanding post at Fort Laramie, Captain W. D. Fouts, Seventh Iowa Cavalry, in command of his Company (D) and small detachments of Companies A and B, of the same regiment, in all four commissioned officers and one hundred and thirty-five enlisted men, left Fort Laramie on the 11th day of June, 1865, enroute to Julesburg, in charge of one hundred and eighty-five lodges of Sioux Indians, numbering in the aggregate from fifteen hundred to two thousand persons. Among them was an organized company, uniformed by Government, and under command of Charles Ellison, who had for some time been intrusted with the supervision of the entire Indian encampments near Fort Laramie, and who was intrusted with seventy thousand rations for these Indians on the march to Julesburg. The Indians were all well armed with bows and arrows, and most of them with fire arms, also. They were ostensibly quite friendly, and expressed themselves as being pleased with their removal. Nothing of interest transpired during the first three days of the march, except signal smokes by Indians north of the Platte by day, and reputed conferences by night between them and the Indians in charge of Captain Fouts. On the evening of the 13th, Captain Fouts and command encamped for the night on the east bank of Horse Creek, and the Indians pitched their tepees on the west. Late in the evening the Indians had a dog feast, and three hundred and eighty-two warriors sat in secret council. On the morning of the 14th, reveille was sounded at three o'clock A. M., and the order of march announced to be at five. At sunrise I was ordered by Captain Fouts to proceed with the advance guards (detachments of Companies A and B) two miles on the route of march, then halt and wait until the wagon train closed up on rear of the advance guard, and the Indians in rear of the wagon train; then to move forward in this order and column of march. Just as the wagons were closing up, I heard the rapid report of fire arms to the rear. Believing it to be a revolt and attack by the Indians, and knowing the great disparity in numbers against us, as well as the fact that Captain Fouts and family, the family of Lieutenant Triggs, and Mrs. Enbanks and child (late rescued Indian captives) were with us, I determined to first prepare for defensive warfare, and had the wagons corralled in the best possible shape, the teams unhitched from the wagons and put inside the corral, and the men in line outside ready for action. In this condition I awaited orders from Captain Fouts. A messenger, coming up shortly after, reported that Captain Fouts had gone across the creek to hurry up the Indians, and was shot and killed by them; and that the Indians were there fighting among themselves. I immediately dispatched a messenger on the fleetest horse, to communicate with Fort Mitchell and the telegraph office, distant eighteen miles. The messenger was closely pursued by Indians. The rear guard (Company D) coming up, I demanded of Lieutenant Haywood why he did not stand and fight the Indians. He replied that his men had no cartridges, and that his Captain (Fouts) had refused to issue them, stating that they would not be needed. Ordering him to have his men fill their cartridge boxes immediately, I ordered Lieutenants Smith and Triggs, in command of sixty-five men, to hold the corral, keep the stock securely hitched within, keep the men in line outside, and dig rifle pits near the corral, in a manner defensible from all approach, while Lieutenant Heywood and I, with seventy men, mounted on our best horses, (the horses were all very poor from hard service without forage, and few were serviceable,) and repaired with all possible dispatch to the scene of action. Passing over the late Indian encampment, we saw the body of Captain Fouts, dead, stripped and mutilated. The Indians had fled two or three miles to the Platte, the squaws and papooses were swimming the river on ponies, and the warriors, on their war horses, were circling and maneuvering in hostile array. Supposing that a part of the Indians were really friendly, and would join us in subduing the rest, I charged on after them. We overtook and passed a few squaws and papooses, whom I forbade my men to injure or molest. These returned. When within six hundred yards of the enemy, I halted my command in line, and sent the interpreter (Ellison) to the front to signal and tell all who were our friends to return and they should not be harmed; but all were hostile, and with hideous yells charged upon us. I dismounted my men, and deployed a line of skirmishers to the front, with long range arms, to receive them. When within three hundred yards, the Indians opened fire upon us. My men answered them promptly with a volley that repulsed them in front, but more than a hundred were dashing by each flank, and closing in the rear, while, from the hills to our left, they were bearing down like an avalanche upon us. Seeing that we were assailed by more than five hundred warriors, (they had evidently been largely reinforced during the previous night,) equally armed and better mounted than my little squad, I thought that to stand, be surrounded, and cut off from our defenses and ammunition, would involve the entire command in indiscriminate massacre, as well as the capture of the train and animals. Deeming "prudence the better part of valor" I remounted my men and fell back to our defenses, by skirmishing to rear and flanks, and only returned by desperate skirmish fighting, for a distance of over four miles, many of my men having entirely emptied their cartridge boxes of ammunition during the engagement. The Indian flankers were in advance of my command from the time we fell back, till the opening fire from our rifle pits sent them howling to the rear. After replenishing the cartridge boxes with a fresh supply of ammunition, and finding that the Indians would not fight us behind our defenses, I, with Lieutenant Smith and fifty men (all I could mount on serviceable horses), went after them again, hoping to detain them until we could be re-enforced; but, after following them nearly three miles, we saw them in vastly superior numbers forming in front and coming over the hills, to our left and rear, evidently intending to entrap and overwhelm us, away from our defenses. Not being strong enough to whip them in open field, we again retired, taking with us our scalped and mutilated dead on the battlefield. Captain Shuman, Eleventh Ohio Cavalry, arriving promptly with re-enforcements at about nine o'clock, I mounted every serviceable horse and mule and went for the Indians again, with sanguine hopes, but the re-enforcements were too late. Their families having got across the river, we had the mortification of seeing the warriors, in following them, ascend the opposite hills and tauntingly beckon us to follow, which was impossible, in face of a superior enemy, at the swimming stage of the river. In their flight the Indians abandoned all their lodges and loose plunder, which I ordered burned or destroyed. On the battle field was a powder keg, which had been recently broken open by the Indians, and a few pounds of powder still remained. The supposition is that it was brought into camp the previous night by Indian allies. From the number of Indians known to be killed in the engagement, we estimated their loss from twenty to thirty, most of whom they threw into the river, in accordance with their superstitious notions of their dead falling into the hands of the enemy.

Our loss was four killed and four wounded, viz: Captain W. D. Fouts, Company D, killed. Private Edward McMahon, Company D, killed. Private Richard Grogen, Company D, killed. Private Philip Alder, Company B, killed. Private Samuel Kersey, Company B, wounded. Private Lewis Tuttle, Company B, wounded. Private James May, Company D, wounded. Private John Trout, Company D, wounded.

In the fight a very few enlisted men I cannot name acted badly, but most of them behaved nobly and some with daring bravery. The officers under my command behaved well. After interring our dead, (except Captain Fouts, afterwards interred at Fort Mitchell,) and repairing the telegraph line, broken by the Indians during the engagement, we took up our line of march and arrived at Fort Mitchell after night-fall. Receiving a dispatch from Colonel Moonlight to cross the river and join him in pursuit of the Indians, I attempted the crossing at two different points, on the 15th, but, the river being wide and coursed with alternate channels that swam, and bars of quicksands that mired, I abandoned the crossing as impracticable, after the drowning of two horses and a mule, and the dragging to shore of two men (one of them Captain Shuman), nearly drowned in attempting to cross. Receiving a telegram from General Conner, on the 16th, to report immediately with my command at Julesburg, I respectfully report his order obeyed.

Very truly and respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN WILCOX, *Captain Company B,
Seventh Iowa Cavalry, Commanding Detachment.*²

The battle described in the foregoing report was officially designated as "Horse Creek," on account of the name of the stream near which it was fought. It was very evident that Captain Fouts was the victim of misplaced confidence in the good faith of the Indians in his charge, and that his death was the first result of their treachery. This trait of Indian character was, perhaps, most notable in the tribe of Sioux Indians, a portion of whom constituted the band who were being removed to the reservation assigned to them, when the revolt took place.

Another engagement, in which a small detachment of the Seventh Iowa Cavalry suffered the greatest loss in killed—in proportion to the number engaged—which occurred in any of its conflicts with the Indians, took place near the post of Julesburg, C. T., on January 7, 1865, and is officially designated as the "Battle of Julesburg." The following account of the engagement is given in the historical memoranda of Major O'Brien, heretofore referred to in this sketch, and has reference to Company F, alone, that being the only company engaged, and that conflict the most important event in its history:

. During the fall and winter of 1863 and 1864, the company was subjected to great hardships, with no quarters except the shelter of a few worn Sibley tents. On account of exposure many were taken sick, but endured their sufferings without a murmur. The quarters were completed on or about the 1st of March, 1864, and the post assumed the name of Fort Cottonwood, commanded by Major George M. O'Brien, Seventh Iowa Cavalry. The company was ordered by General Mitchell to march from Cottonwood to Fort Laramie, July 19, 1864; arrived at Fort Laramie July 28th. While the company remained at that post, parties were engaged in scouting the country in quest of hostile Indians. On August 21st, the Company was ordered to proceed to Julesburg, C. T., where it arrived August 24th; distance marched 170 miles. Total distance marched from July 19 to August 24, 1864, 966 miles. Upon arriving at Julesburg, the company commenced erecting quarters and supplying the garrison with fuel, which is from sixty to eighty miles distant. On the 7th of January, 1865, thirty-seven men of the company, being all that were present for duty, engaged in battle some fifteen hundred Indian warriors, concentrated for battle near the post. The Indians at first retired, and I immediately ordered a pursuit, which was continued to the bluffs, when, suddenly from every ravine and hiding place, the savages threw themselves upon my little band; at first the enemy was checked, but only for a moment. The enemy compelled my men to retreat, leaving fourteen of the detachment dead on the field, horribly mutilated. After the retreat, the Indians retired. Many Indians were killed and wounded. On the 2d of February, the post was attacked by a large number of Indians, who were repulsed with severe loss, without doing my company any injury.³

Captain Nicholas J. O'Brien was the commanding officer of Company F, and the presumption is that it was from his official report to the Major that the memoranda was made. It is a very notable fact that, in these conflicts with the Indians, the number of killed is far in excess of the wounded, on both sides, while in the battles between the Union and Confederate troops, the wounded were almost invariably largely in excess of the killed. In the battle of Julesburg no wounded are reported, while fourteen of the thirty-seven men engaged were killed.⁴ The description of the hardships endured by Company F will apply as well to all the companies of the regiment, at one time or another, during their long and arduous term of service. Their service extended over such a wide field, and the enemy with whom they had to deal was so elusive and treacherous, that it required great fortitude and capacity for endurance on the part of the troops. Their marches extended over many thousands of miles in Colorado, Kansas, Nebraska and Dakota Territories. Company A has a record of 5,300 miles traveled in scouting, escorting trains, pursuing Indians and changing stations, from the time it took the field to the 28th of February, 1865.⁵ Other companies have similar records and, at the time they were mustered out of the service, all of them had probably exceeded that record.

The official reports of Major General Sully show that detachments from the Seventh Iowa Cavalry participated in the battles of White Stone Hill and Tahkahokutah. In both these battles the regiment fully sustained the good reputation it had won in all its previous engagements, and performed its duty bravely and efficiently. Captain Millard, in command of his company, followed General Sully in his charge through the center of the Indian encampment at White Stone Hill, and continued to follow up the Indians, who made a desperate resistance, until darkness ended the conflict. In the next engagement, three companies of the regiment, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Pattee, again followed the gallant General Sully and contributed their full share in winning another decisive victory over the combined Indian tribes. General Sully's reports describe the movements of his troops, previous to and during these battles, with great minuteness and particularity, and show the great difficulties encountered in conducting his campaigns, the hardships and privations to which the troops under his command were subjected and the great value of the service of these brave volunteer soldiers to the Government.⁶

Copious extracts from these reports have been made in the compilation of the historical sketch of the Sixth Iowa Cavalry, and the compiler—to avoid repetition—refers the reader to that sketch, which is contained in this volume. The records of the Sixth and Seventh Regiments of Iowa Cavalry are, to a considerable extent, identical. The general character of the service performed by the two regiments was the same. The companies composing both were often widely separated and located at lonely posts, far beyond the frontier, and from those posts the movements of the Indians were noted. Often messengers were sent to distant forts, and, in the performance of that dangerous service, some of those brave men were overtaken and slain by the Indians. The life of the cavalry soldier on the plains was fraught with constant danger and hardship. In the exhaustive official report of Major General Pope, commanding the Department of the Northwest, the operations of the troops against the Indians, the location of the various military posts and of the Indian tribes, the long line of frontier to be defended, the almost insuperable difficulties encountered, are all most fully described; and the brave officers and men serving in his department, including the Sixth and Seventh Regiments of Iowa Cavalry, are highly commended.⁷ Could this and many other official reports pertaining exclusively to the campaigns against the Indians, in which these Iowa regiments participated, be incorporated in this sketch, a more adequate comprehension of the value of their service and the privations they endured could be had. It is not, however, within the province of the compiler of these necessarily brief historical sketches to give more than the outlines of the history of each organization. In his "Iowa in War Times" Major Byers pays a fine tribute to the Sixth and Seventh Regiments of Iowa Cavalry, which is here quoted, in part, as follows:

They had hard marches, far away from the comforts or advantages of civilization; they fought barbarous foes, and usually in overwhelming numbers, and were always victorious. Some of them marched from three thousand to five thousand miles, and scouts and petty fights were weekly occurrences. The regiments were nearly always more or less divided, garrisoning different posts, scouting and marching in different directions, making a succinct history of their arduous services almost impossible. They were led by good and brave officers, and their services were of as much value to the country, in beating back savages, as were the services of other regiments in fighting the rebels in the South. . . . The character of warfare practiced on the western plains required a degree of endurance, personal bravery and heroism, not excelled on the bloodiest battlefields of the South.⁸

L. D. Ingersoll, in his "Iowa and the Rebellion," after having made mention of the gallant conduct of Colonel Summers, pays the following tribute to Colonel and Brevet Brigadier General Heath, and his regiment:

Colonel Summers was mustered out of the service not long after the battle of Julesburg, and returned to Iowa. Some months afterwards, Major Heath, always popular with the command, was commissioned, and was mustered Colonel in the following May, and soon afterwards was brevetted Brigadier General. The Department of Missouri was now in command of Major General G. M. Dodge, who devoted much of his energies to the protection of our western settlers and of the overland line of travel to the Pacific Coast. General Heath went to Fort Kearney, and, taking command of a sub-district, succeeded in defeating the Indians in one or two engagements, and in making it safe for travelers to journey to the great gold-bearing regions of our country. . . . General Heath conducted hostilities against the Indians with great success, and won the encomiums of not only his superior officers but of the people who had been so long harassed that they had well nigh given up all hope of being soon relieved from the terrors of Indian warfare. "The citizens of Nebraska," says a leading journal of that territory, "and especially those living on and interested in the great overland road, may congratulate themselves upon having a military commander who thoroughly understands the mode of Indian warfare, and who is willing to march against them, and to endure the same privations and fatigue that his men do, sharing his rations with them; whose home in the field is in the saddle, and whose movements are as rapid as those of his wily foe. These qualities are combined in General Heath, who stands head and shoulders above any officer who has been in command at Fort Kearney, since the beginning of the Indian troubles." It is doubtless on account of the efficient services of General Heath and his command that the Seventh Cavalry is still retained in the service (January, 1866) and will probably be retained for some months to come. Its troopers, in whole or by detachments, have already taken part in every expedition against Indians, in the Departments of the Missouri, Kansas and the Northwest, from the middle of 1863 to the present time, and they have always done their duty manfully, skillfully, bravely. They have endured many privations, suffered many hardships, but they have suffered with patience as they have fought ever gallantly, keeping from our borders a ruthless enemy, who, but for their sleepless vigilance and untiring energy, would have carried fire and massacre and indescribable horrors over the new settlements of our frontier. There is a heavy debt of gratitude due from the country, and especially from the Northwest, to those troops who were denied the privilege of fighting rebels in the South, but who performed invaluable services on the less glorious field of the far west.⁹

The historical memoranda of Major O'Brien, heretofore referred to, gives a condensed record of the operations of each company of the regiment, except Company I. This record shows that Companies K and M re-enlisted as Veteran Volunteers, at Fort Sully, on the 28th and 29th of February, 1864, under General Orders No. 191, of the War Department. As the order provided that soldiers re-enlisting for a second term of three years should be furnished with transportation to the State from which they originally enlisted, and be granted a furlough of thirty days, to begin after reaching the State, these two companies were transported on flatboats down the Missouri River to Sioux City. They embarked on March 17, 1864, and reached Sioux City on April 5th, having been blockaded by ice for several days on the way, and covered a distance of six hundred miles by river. They left Sioux City on April 5th, and, upon the expiration of their furloughs, reassembled at Davenport, Iowa, from which place they returned to Sioux City, and, on May 30th, joined the Northwestern Indian Expedition, under command of General Sully. The following foot note appears at the end of the last roster, showing casualties and changes among the officers of the regiment:¹⁰

Company I, of this regiment, was originally known as the "Sioux City Cavalry," and as such was mustered into the service of the United States at Sioux City, Nov. 14, 1861. By order of the War Department, dated April 25, 1863, the company was transferred to the Seventh Cavalry, July 14, 1863. The officers and most of the enlisted men were mustered out November 23, 1864, on the expiration of their term of service, and its remaining members, being transferred to the new Company L, Company I ceased to exist. The Seventh Regiment of Iowa Cavalry Volunteers, excepting the Lieutenant Colonel, and Companies K, L and M, were mustered out of the service at Leavenworth, Kan., May 17, 1866. Companies K, L and M were mustered out at Sioux City, June 22, 1866. The date and place of muster out of the Lieutenant Colonel is not known at this office. All officers, not otherwise accounted for, were mustered out with their organizations as above. Companies K, L and M, of this regiment, were originally known as Companies A, B and C, of the Fourteenth Infantry; subsequently they became the Battalion of the Forty-first Infantry. May 14, 1863, they were transferred to the Seventh Cavalry, under order of the War Department, dated April 25, 1863. The original Company L, of this regiment, was mustered out of service in November, 1864, on the expiration of the term of service of most of its members. A new company was subsequently organized, composed of the veterans and recruits of the former Companies I and L, and other recruits, and called Company L.

The foregoing extract shows how the different portions of the regiment terminated their honorable career of service as volunteers of the United States Army. It may be justly said of the Seventh Iowa Cavalry that its service to its State and the general Government was of great importance. Its field of service was constantly upon the frontier, and, while it was keeping in check the savages who had waged such relentless war upon the pioneer settlers, other Iowa regiments were winning glory and fame upon the great battlefields of the South. While that opportunity did not come to the gallant Seventh Iowa Cavalry, let it ever be remembered that in the field of service to which it was assigned it performed its duty faithfully and heroically, and it is entitled to a prominent position among the nine splendid cavalry regiments which the State of Iowa contributed to the service during that memorable period in the history of the United States—1861 to 1866.

Eighth Regiment

Iowa Volunteer Cavalry

EIGHTH REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER CAVALRY

The Eighth Regiment of Iowa Cavalry was organized under special authority of the War Department, bearing date April 6, 1863. The twelve companies of which it was composed were ordered into quarters by the Governor of the State, on dates ranging from August 13 to September 1, 1863. Davenport, Iowa, was designated in the order as the place of rendezvous, and there, on the 30th day of September, 1863, the twelve companies and their officers, together with the field and staff officers of the regiment, were mustered into the service of the United States, by Lieutenant Colonel William N. Grier, of the Regular Army. At the date of its muster into the service, the regiment had an aggregate strength of 1,234 men.¹ Its camp, near Davenport, was given the name of "Camp Roberts," in official orders. The regiment was fortunate in the selection of Colonel Joseph B. Dorr as its commander. This officer had entered the service November 5, 1861, as Regimental Quartermaster of the Twelfth Iowa Infantry, and had won distinction in the battle of Shiloh. Colonel J. J. Woods, in his official report of the Twelfth Iowa, in that battle, made special mention of his gallant conduct as follows: "Quartermaster Dorr, although his position did not require him to go into action, volunteered to do so, and throughout the day behaved daringly, if not recklessly, exposing his person to the enemy. . . . Energetic and efficient in his own department, he would fill a higher one with credit to himself and honor to the service." This prediction was fully verified in the subsequent splendid achievements of Colonel Dorr, as the commander of the Eighth Iowa Cavalry. Nearly all the other field and staff and many of the line officers of the regiment had the advantage of having had experience in the service. This was also true of many of the enlisted men, who had also served in other Iowa regiments. The cavalry branch of the service was always the most popular among those desiring to enlist and, when the organization of the Eighth Cavalry was authorized, the number of volunteers was far in excess of the number that could be accepted. Twenty-two companies, numbering over two thousand men, offered their services to Colonel Dorr, and from that number he had the selection of the twelve companies which composed his regiment. It will thus be seen that the organization of the regiment was perfected under the most favorable conditions. The regiment was only partially equipped and its officers were busily engaged in drilling and instructing the men in the manual of arms and the various evolutions of a cavalry regiment, when, on the 14th of October, it was ordered to proceed to Louisville, Ky.

On October 17, 1863, the regiment left Camp Roberts, and was conveyed by rail to Louisville, by way of Michigan City and Indianapolis, arriving there and going into camp on October 22d. On November 4th the regiment took up its first line of march, towards Nashville, Tenn., where it arrived on the 16th, having covered the distance of two hundred and twenty miles by easy marches. At Nashville the regiment completed its equipment, and was prepared for active service in the field, but, instead of receiving orders to join the army under Major General Thomas, as he had expected, Colonel Dorr was ordered to report to General A. C. Gillem, then in command of the troops on the line of the Nashville and Northwestern Railroad. For the condensed history of the operations of the regiment, which follows, the compiler has had recourse to the official reports of Colonel J. B. Dorr and his Adjutant, Henry H. Belfield, made to Adjutant General N. B. Baker.² The regiment covered a wide field in its operations, and only the most important events in its history can be included in this sketch.

On the 1st of December, 1863, the regiment left Nashville, and, in obedience to his orders, Colonel Dorr proceeded along the line of railroad, then being operated almost exclusively by the Government in forwarding troops and supplies to the armies at the front. The inhabitants of the country were intensely disloyal and hostile to the Government. Adjutant Belfield says in his report: "It was the boast of Humphreys County, of which Waverly is the seat, that but one Union man had lived within its limits, and he had been killed." Nearly every man in the county had at one time been in the rebel army, and those who had been discharged on account of wounds or sickness, and had returned to their homes, were nearly all connected, directly or indirectly, with the guerrilla bands which infested the country. Such were the conditions which confronted Colonel Dorr when he marched with his regiment into that hot-bed of treason and rebellion. He found no considerable organized force of the enemy, only scattered bands of guerrillas (or bush-whackers as they were more generally called), who were so thoroughly familiar with every road and by-path of the woods that they could generally avoid their pursuers; but they were finally hunted down and captured or driven out of the country.

Colonel Dorr was instructed to assume the management of the civil as well as the military affairs of a district, embracing eight counties, the ordinary enforcement of the laws by the local civil authorities having been almost entirely suspended. Over this wide region, where a state of general lawlessness and anarchy prevailed, the Eighth Iowa Cavalry and its energetic commander were constantly occupied in endeavoring to restore a semblance of law and order, and in guarding the line of railroad, during the winter of 1863-4. The headquarters of the regiment were established at Waverly, and from that point Colonel Dorr directed the operations of his entire command. One battalion of the Eighth Iowa Cavalry was retained at headquarters, but this battalion—or detachments from it—was engaged in scouting through the surrounding country, while the other two battalions, under command of Major Price and Major Thompson, were stationed at different points in the district, from which similar operations were conducted. The First Kansas Battery was detailed for service with the regiment, one section being kept on duty at headquarters and one section detailed for duty with the battalion commanded by Major Price.

The extended operations of the regiment during this period of its service, and the important results accomplished, are shown in the following extracts from the official report of Colonel Dorr. After describing the movements of his regiment, which covered the country in every direction from Fort Donelson on the Cumberland, a distance of about forty miles north, to near Clifton, sixty miles south, embracing a district of one hundred miles by seventy, he says:

. . . The report of Colonel Hawkins' ability to concentrate a large force, and to drive us out, which was threatened, proved false. Yet he was prowling over the country with small bands from ten to fifty strong, robbing and plundering all who manifested any sentiment of Unionism, or even less than the bitterest hostility to the Federals. The country was peculiarly adapted for bushwhacking operations, being broken into sharp hills and deep valleys, rugged bluffs and deep gulches, with but very little tillable land. The whole surface has been wooded, and the clearings are small in extent, presenting on all hands the best cover for bands of desperate men like Hawkins, who, knowing every foot of country and every by-path, are enabled to traverse it in any direction, and avoid contact with Federal troops sent in pursuit. But the regiment entered upon the work of clearing the country of these robbers, with a determination to succeed and fully accomplish the duty. Hawkins and his men were pursued from point to point, and himself, nearly all his commissioned officers and large numbers of his men, captured. Instead of administering the oath of allegiance to the citizens, I adopted the policy of placing them under bonds with sureties, and found this had a wonderful influence towards quieting the country. Repentant rebels have a much greater fear of losing their property than of violating an oath, which, indeed, most of them consider compulsory.

One expedition was made during December, which deserves notice as an opening incident in the history of a new regiment. On the 20th, Lieutenant Wilbur F. McCarron, Company G, with forty men, crossed Duck River during a violent storm of wind and rain, and under most disadvantageous circumstances, the stream being swollen out of its banks and running at a furious rate. The crossing was not effected until after dark; but, without halting, he pushed out over the low lands, covered with water from the overflowing river, and, traversing a thickly wooded country a distance of fourteen miles, reached the rendezvous of a portion of Hawkins' men, and captured Captain Nance, one lieutenant and twelve men, with their horses and arms. I had expected that Colonel Hawkins and his staff, with twenty-five or thirty of his best men, would have been found there, but he had been too careful of his life and liberty to trust himself within twenty miles of the post for quarters. The party returned across the river by daylight next morning. Lieutenant McCarron is entitled to much credit for his perseverance under difficulties. The sanitary condition of the regiment, under charge of Surgeon William H. Finley, assisted by Dr. A. S. Carnahan and Dr. D. H. Warren, Assistant Surgeons, is most excellent, the Eighth Iowa Cavalry being probably the healthiest regiment in the service.³

The report, from which the foregoing extract was made, brought the history of the regiment down to the beginning of the year 1864, at which time the headquarters and positions of the battalions remained as heretofore described. Resuming his report, Colonel Dorr says:

. . . Still in camp along the Nashville and Northwestern Railroad . . . A large amount of stores having arrived at Waverly Landing, Company G, part of Company K, and one gun of the battery, under command of Captain P. C. Morhiser, were stationed there as a guard, and to furnish escort for the train which was employed in removing the stores to Waverly. With our limited transportation, and all the teams which could be impressed in the country, this was not effected until the 1st of March. Captain Morhiser discharged the duty with energy and zeal, losing no portion of the stores, although his pickets were attacked on several occasions, and the trains threatened. In the first days of January the weather became severely cold, from which the scouting parties, who were constantly in the saddle, suffered a great deal—one party having no less than twelve men badly frosted, one so badly as to require amputation. In consequence of neglect at Nashville, we suffered badly for clothing, as well as other quartermaster supplies, although every exertion was made by regimental officers to anticipate the wants of the troops. But Thomas's men at Chattanooga were greatly in want, and, as that was the front of the army of the Cumberland, they had to be supplied first.⁴

The operations of the regiment, for the remainder of the winter of 1864, may be summarized as follows: In January, Lieutenant Colonel Barner, with two companies of his regiment and one section of the First Kansas Battery, was sent to scour the country along the Tennessee River as far as Fort Henry, which duty he accomplished in a satisfactory manner. In the same month, detachments, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Barner and Major Brown, made a thorough scout of the country on the north and south sides of Duck River, from which they returned with a considerable number of prisoners, horses and arms, having also driven many desperadoes out of the country. About the 1st of February the rebel General Roddy crossed the Tennessee River, at Florence, with a large force of cavalry, for the purpose of making a raid into the district occupied by the Eighth Iowa Cavalry. Captain Burns with his company (A) was detailed by Colonel Dorr to make a scout in the direction of the approaching enemy, and report his movements, while the remainder of the regiment was held in readiness for an engagement; but the rebel General retreated as rapidly as he had advanced, and Captain Burns returned from his scout without having come into contact with the enemy. Detachments from the regiment continued to scout the country in every direction and made numerous captures. Captain Burns, with twenty men, by a rapid march overtook and captured Lieutenant Colonel Brewer, of the rebel General Forrest's command, who, with a small escort of a lieutenant and eleven men, was—under orders from Forrest—making his way to West Kentucky, for the purpose of enlisting recruits for the rebel army. Colonel Brewer refused to surrender until he was wounded and overpowered, with his escort, only one of whom escaped. Important dispatches were secured with this capture. Captains Evans, Root, Cummings and Shurtz were also quite successful in capturing prisoners. Three rebel mails were captured and important information gained from the letters they contained. Many deserters from the rebel army came to the post at Waverly and took the oath of allegiance to the Federal Government. Lieutenant Charles Linderman, of Company A, received special mention in Colonel Dorr's report, for the prompt and efficient manner in which he discharged the duties of Provost Marshal at Waverly. While the regiment had sustained but few casualties in its numerous skirmishes with the lawless bands it had encountered, it had captured a large number of prisoners, and had succeeded in reclaiming the district in which it operated from a state of anarchy to at least a comparative degree of peace and good order.

The regiment was now about to enter upon an active and vigorous campaign against the regularly organized forces of the rebel army, in which it was, for the first time, to operate in conjunction with other cavalry regiments. On March 13, 1864, Colonel Dorr was relieved by other troops and, turning over the command of the post at Waverly to his successor, marched with his regiment to Nashville, where he arrived on the 17th, and at once commenced refitting his regiment, by procuring horses to replace those which had become disabled, and otherwise completing its equipment. On the 1st of April the regiment started on the march for Chattanooga. It then had 1050 enlisted men in the saddle, well mounted and equipped, with its full complement of officers, and all in excellent health and spirits. It reached Chattanooga on the 10th, and from there continued its march to Cleveland, where it arrived on the 13th and joined the First Brigade, First Division, of Cavalry, commanded by Brigadier General E. M. McCook. The regiment remained in camp at Cleveland until May 3d, when, with its brigade and division, it marched to the front and began the series of operations which were continued to the close of one of the most remarkable campaigns in military history.

Before starting on the campaign, Colonel Dorr had been assigned to the command of the First Brigade, and Lieutenant Colonel Barner was left in command of the regiment. On the 5th of May Major Price, of the Eighth Iowa Cavalry, who had been sent with a detachment of his regiment on a reconnaissance, found the enemy only about four miles in advance of the brigade, on the road leading to Dalton. On May 6th, detachments from the Eighth Iowa and other regiments made a careful examination of the enemy's position and the approaches to it, and, on the 7th, the brigade, with the Eighth Iowa Cavalry in advance, moved down the Dalton road and drove the enemy out of Varnell's Station. Skirmishing was continued during the day and, at 4 p. m., the brigade occupied a position two miles west of the station, which it reached under fire from the enemy's artillery. During the execution of the movement the regiment had several men wounded and several horses killed. On May 9th the brigade again advanced and reached a point three miles south of Varnell's Station, the Second Brigade occupying a position on its left. In the engagement which ensued the enemy was driven back three miles. The Eighth Iowa Cavalry led the advance and captured a temporary line of works erected by the enemy, Company E taking the most conspicuous part in the capture, and Corporals Pease and Sharp, of that company, particularly distinguishing themselves by their brave conduct, which was subsequently rewarded by their promotion. While the First Brigade was successful in this movement, the Second Brigade, advancing on its left, was outflanked by the enemy, and its commander and 120 of his men were captured. Colonel Dorr moved his brigade promptly to the support of the Second, upon learning of its disaster, and successfully covered its retreat from its exposed position, which could not be maintained.

On May 10th the brigade made another forward movement, in the direction of Dalton, driving the enemy from a wooded ridge. On May 11th and 12th the forward movement was continued, and there was more or less skirmishing with the enemy, who continued to fall back until he reached a strong position at Ray's Gap. On May 13th Colonel Dorr received orders to attack the enemy at the Gap, and at once moved forward with his brigade, his own regiment taking the advance; but, just as preparations for the attack had been completed, the skirmishers discovered that the rebels had abandoned their strong position during the night and were again retreating towards Resaca, the town of Dalton being also evacuated about the same time. Colonel Dorr's Brigade followed in pursuit of the enemy, on the valley road towards Tilton, near which place the Eighth Iowa relieved the First Tennessee, and, again taking the advance, soon came up with and engaged the enemy and drove him from his position. The pursuit was continued until the enemy was again found, in heavy force, posted in a strong position, and another engagement ensued. Reinforcements came to the aid of the First Brigade, and the enemy was again driven from his position and forced to retreat. Night coming on, the pursuit was abandoned and the tired troops went into camp.

On May 14th the whole division moved to Tilton. The First Brigade was ordered to construct barricades, while the Second Brigade engaged the enemy on the left of the infantry. On the 15th, the enemy evacuated Resaca, and Colonel Dorr was ordered to move forward with his brigade. The Eighth Iowa had the advance and crossed the Conasauga River, four miles above Resaca, and moved rapidly forward to McClure's Ferry, on the Coosawattie River, where a brigade of General Stoneman's had halted, and was hesitating about attempting to ford the river, as camp fires could be seen for some distance up and down the stream, on the opposite side, indicating that the enemy was posted there in strong force. Colonel Dorr determined to cross the river with his brigade, and ordered the Eighth Iowa to move forward and enter the ford, while two companies were posted to cover the crossing, should the enemy be encountered. The crossing was effected in safety, however, the rebel force having retreated, leaving the burning camp fires to deceive and delay the advance of the Union forces. After crossing the river, Colonel Dorr sent detachments from the Eighth Iowa to scout the roads in different directions. One of these detachments encountered the enemy's pickets five miles from the river, and discovered the main camp of the rebel force. The next morning the brigade and division moved forward, and the enemy again retreated. On May 19th, six companies of the Eighth Iowa, under command of Majors Root and Price, had a brisk engagement with a rebel force, in which the enemy was driven from a strong position. Company G, under Lieutenant McCarron, and Company M, under Captain Hoxie, were conspicuous in the charge and won special mention in Colonel Dorr's report. From the 22d of May to the 1st of June, the Eighth Iowa Cavalry, with the other troops of its brigade and division, was engaged every day in skirmishing with the enemy, the most notable of these skirmishes occurring on the 24th, when Lieutenant Colonel Barner with his regiment steadily pushed the enemy for three miles, encountering stubborn resistance and freely exposing his men to the fire of both artillery and musketry. During this advance, Captain M. M. Walden, of Company H, made a brilliant and successful charge with his company; and again, on the 25th, Captain Hoxie and Lieutenant Anderson, with the men of their companies, exhibited conspicuous bravery under the fire of a rebel battery.

From the 1st to the 17th of June, the regiment, with its brigade and division, continued to advance with the rest of the army, and the enemy was steadily forced back to Kenesaw Mountain on the right and Lost Mountain on the left of his line, his center holding a position on Pine Mountain. On June 17th, the enemy was driven from his position on Pine Mountain and, on the same day, McCook's and Stoneman's cavalry were ordered forward to engage in the struggle for the possession of Lost Mountain. The Eighth Iowa Cavalry reached the base of the mountain at noon and was placed in support of the Eighteenth Indiana Battery, which was directing its fire against the rebel batteries on the crest of the mountain. That night the regiment went into camp a short distance from the base of the mountain, and the next morning, in advance of the brigade and division, moved around to the north side of the mountain and had reached the Dallas road, when the enemy was discovered to have evacuated his strong position and was again retreating down the valley. Some companies of the Eighth Iowa and Second Michigan Cavalry went in pursuit, and harassed the rebel cavalry which constituted the rear guard, following them about five miles, when they took refuge behind their infantry. On the same day, Captain Walden, with a detachment from the Eighth Iowa, captured a hospital and a considerable number of prisoners.

The regiment remained in camp at Lost Mountain until July 1st, when, with its brigade and division, and in co-operation with General Stoneman's Cavalry Division, it again assumed the aggressive and was soon engaged in conflict with the enemy. On July 5th, the two divisions of cavalry marched from the right to the left flank of the army, and took position at the fords of the Chattahoochee River, where they remained until the 18th, guarding the fords. Skirmishes with the enemy's cavalry were of daily occurrence. On the 18th, Colonel Dorr marched with a detachment of his regiment across the river, to observe more closely the movements of the enemy. This was the first time any of the cavalry had crossed the Chattahoochee. On the next day Major Isett, with a small detachment, crossed the river on the same mission, and, on the 22d, the entire division was ordered to cross and move forward to Atlanta, a report having been received that the rebels had evacuated that place, which was soon found to be a mistake, and the division took position at Mason's Church, where, on July 23d, it was attacked by a large force of rebel cavalry, which attack was successfully repulsed.

Colonel Dorr had resumed command of his regiment on the 22d, having been relieved of the command of the brigade by Colonel Croxton, upon whom the command devolved, on account of his being Colonel Dorr's senior in rank. On July 24th the division moved to a new position, near Atlanta, but returned to Mason's Church on the 25th, and, on the following day, again successfully resisted an attack from the enemy. The compiler has thus far given only a condensed description of the operations of the Eighth Iowa Cavalry, from the time it started on the Atlanta campaign, May 3, 1864. Its subsequent operations to the close of the year are fully described in the report of Colonel Dorr, from which the foregoing summary has been compiled; and, at the risk of exceeding the limitation of space assigned to this sketch, the compiler feels that it is but just to Colonel Dorr and his regiment that the remainder of his excellent report should be given without any attempt at abridgment. The report is dated, "Waterloo, Ala., January 15, 1865," and the following quotation covers the operations of the regiment from the 27th of July to the 31st of December, 1864.⁵

On the 27th, orders were received to make a raid upon the enemy's communications, and the regiment, with the balance of the division and a part of Colonel Harrison's Brigade, crossed the Chattahoochee River and moved down the west side, recrossing at Riverton Ferry, six miles below Campbellton. On the 28th, reached Palmetto Station, on the West Point and Atlanta Railroad, about dusk; destroyed the depot, some public stores, a quantity of cotton, and about one and a half miles of the track and telegraph. Left Palmetto about 9 p. m. and reached Fayetteville at daylight on the morning of the 29th; halted some three hours and then moved forward, First Brigade in advance. During the night, and before reaching Fayetteville, the Second Brigade captured a considerable wagon train and a number of prisoners. After leaving the last named place a considerable number of wagons and prisoners were captured, and, about 8 o'clock, the expedition reached the railroad half a mile north of Lovejoy's Station. The First Tennessee, which had the advance, having met with slight resistance, a battalion of the Eighth was sent forward to reinforce that regiment. On arriving at the railroad, pickets were thrown out on all the roads, and the work of destruction upon the road commenced. A detachment of the Eighth, on picket at the Station, destroyed one box car containing goods, and three or four platform cars, water tank and a wood shed. A small reconnoitering party was sent out towards McDonough, from the Eighth. Between one and two miles of road was destroyed and the telegraph for some distance.

At 2 p. m., commenced the retrograde movement towards the Chattahoochee, First Brigade in the rear. About one mile west of Lovejoy's Station found Jackson's Division of rebel cavalry had got on our road, and between us and Second Brigade. Almost at the same moment I received orders from Colonel Croxton, commanding brigade, to move forward and attack the enemy. The regiment moved up at a trot, and at a short distance came up with the brigade commander, who ordered me to charge them with the Eighth. I advanced at a fast trot until within striking distance, when I ordered the charge, and the regiment, right in front in column, dashed forward gallantly on the enemy. The rebels were in column in the road, and in line on the right and left of the road. Their front gave back rapidly before this headlong charge, but those in the rear and on the left of the road poured in a most deadly fire, before which the head of the column went down like grass before the scythe. That portion of the enemy's force on the left of the road had been mostly concealed from me, by the nature of the ground. I saw, just as the head of the column struck the enemy, that this portion of their force must be routed, or the column in the road would be exposed to a flank as well as a front fire. Instantly I ordered the companies in rear of the First Battalion into the field on the left of the road, for the purpose of charging that portion of the enemy's line. But at this critical moment I discovered that they had not come up, having been ordered by Colonel Croxton, as they were following the First Battalion, to turn off the road and form in a field to the left. I had but 292 men with me on the raid, and by this order, without notice, I was left, with about 100 men, to charge an entire brigade, and that the best brigade in the rebel service, composed of the Third, Sixth and Ninth Texas. Indeed, it has never been certainly ascertained that Jackson's whole division was not there; a battle flag believed to be his was in the field, on the left of the road, and nearly reached by my men. Of course so small a force was obliged to fall back, which they did, to an angle of the road about 150 yards from where the column struck the enemy's line, and from which they had been driven. This position was held until the Fourth Kentucky and First Tennessee came up on our right. The enemy attempted to move to our left flank, but were prevented by a portion of the Eighth, and a part of Second Brigade sent back by General McCook. Orders being received from Colonel Croxton to move forward by a road to the left, the whole brigade withdrew and moved rapidly forward towards Newnan, on the West Point and Atlanta Railroad, intending to cross the Chattahoochee opposite or below that place. The loss of the Eighth was eight or nine killed and about fourteen wounded, including among the killed First Lieutenant James Horton, Company K, Acting Adjutant, and Second Lieutenant Joseph H. Cobb, Company G. Both were as gallant young officers as ever drew a sabre. Both fell at the head of the column, and if to die for one's country is glorious, theirs was a glorious death, for they met it boldly and unflinchingly in the very shock of battle. William Christy, Sergeant Major, fell, terribly wounded in four places, but, too brave to yield, courageously made his way without assistance to the rear. All the officers and men, with few exceptions, did nobly in this fight. Of course our dead and the severely wounded we were compelled to leave in the hands of the enemy, the only ambulance belonging to the regiment being in advance with the ambulance train.

During the night following we continued the march through swamps and over most difficult roads. Portions of the regiment, under command of Majors Root and Issett, operated on the flanks and rear. About noon, on the 30th, the head of the expedition, on entering Newnan, unexpectedly came upon Roddy's dismounted cavalry, on their way to Atlanta. This force, in addition to Wheeler's whole cavalry, which came up soon after, gave the enemy fully eight thousand men, and enabled them to force back the Federal column and occupy the road in our front. The Second Brigade was in front, followed by the First Brigade, Colonel Harrison's Brigade being in the rear; and both the Second Brigade and Harrison's were slightly engaged. The Eighth was ordered to dismount in the road where the whole command was halted, and throw up barricades, which was done. We remained in this position some time without hearing anything of the enemy. Absent for some minutes at a few hundred yards from the regiment, on account of a wound received at Lovejoy's, on the 29th, I received orders to move forward, and requested the Adjutant General, Captain William A. Sutherland, who brought me the order, to give it to Major Root, who was with the regiment. In a few minutes I overtook the regiment, which had moved forward half a mile, and found it had made a charge, one portion under Major Root and another portion under Major Isett. The enemy gave way in confusion, and Major Isett captured a large number of the horses of Ross's Brigade. General Hume, commanding a brigade, was captured by Lieutenant George M. Detwiler, of Company C, but was recaptured by the enemy, together with the gallant officer by whom he had been taken. The Eighth had cleared the way, as Captain Walden reported to me just as I came up, and which fact was reported to the brigade commander. Had the whole division then moved forward, we should have been able to hold the road. But the enemy so largely outnumbered that portion of the expeditionary forces engaged that they soon rallied and again occupied the road. In this encounter, which lasted some thirty minutes, great gallantry was displayed by both officers and men. The Eighth lost severely. I reformed the regiment near and to the right of the battery, the Second Indiana and Fifth Iowa being on the left. In a few minutes the enemy again advanced and made a desperate effort to take the battery. I advanced with the Eighth dismounted, and drove the enemy from our front. The Second Indiana and Fifth Iowa did the same. Twice more the rebels made desperate efforts to capture our guns, but were each time bravely met and handsomely repulsed, the battery firing canister at short range. It was five o'clock when General McCook determined to abandon his artillery, ambulances and wounded. The artillery carriages were cut down and the pieces spiked, and heavily loaded with percussion or shell. About this time Colonel Croxton, commanding the brigade, being reported missing, I received orders to take command of the brigade. Major Root having been missing since the first charge, I directed Major Isett to take command of the regiment. But I soon learned from Captain Sutherland that the other regiments of the brigade could not be found. Of the Eighth there was not far from one hundred, which was indeed all that was left of the First Brigade. Of these, several were wounded and were without arms, having lost them in the fight. After abandoning the artillery, the column moved to the left and crossed some fields, intending to take a by-path through the woods, which entered the LaGrange road some little distance from the battlefield. Just as the head of the column entered the forest, General McCook rode back to where I was, and asked if I could form the Eighth on the brow of the hill that we had just passed, and "check the enemy." I replied, "I can." He then ordered me to do so, saying: "This retreat must be protected." At once I directed Major Isett to form the Eighth on the ground indicated. This was in plain sight of the enemy, who were seen advancing. In this position we were obliged to remain, seeing the enemy moving towards our flank, until the fragments of regiments, the stragglers and skulkers, who filled the road upon which the column had moved, got out of our way. Every minute's delay I knew lessened our chances of escape, but there was no help for it, and the regiment, with a few exceptions, gallantly did their duty, calmly awaiting orders. General McCook, with the main column, was heard sharply engaged as he successfully cut his way out.

Knowing the enemy was moving in force upon the LaGrange road to cut us off, and seeing he did not intend to attack us where we stood, I determined, by moving on the left flank of the retreating column, to gain a position between the enemy and the supposed intersection of the road, on which the column was moving, with the LaGrange road. The movement was commenced, but on reaching the timber I found it was impracticable to move with any celerity, and was compelled, therefore, to follow the column. We had marched but a little distance, however, before we met a regiment in a stampede, (Fourth Tennessee, I think,) saying they were cut off. As there was no passing the column in that narrow forest road, we were compelled to turn about and move back until we could get out of the road and let the Tennessee regiment by, which we did, and then move forward again; but it was too late. The enemy had thrown a brigade on this our only outlet from the scene of battle and disaster, and, after a few more fruitless efforts, the fragment of the regiment, exhausted, worn out with fighting and loss of sleep, gave up to the overwhelming force around them. Seventeen men and three commissioned officers, escaping by different routes, reached the retreating column and got safely into the Federal lines. Our loss in killed and wounded will never be accurately known. According to the reports of the Federal surgeons, left in charge of our wounded at Newnan, more than half the wounded in hospital there belonged to the Eighth, and it is reasonable to suppose that among the killed there was the same proportion. Our dead upon the battlefield were robbed of all valuables, and in most cases entirely denuded of their clothes. I saw fifteen of my own regiment lying thus beside the road. The loss of the enemy, as reported by themselves, was between five and six hundred in killed and wounded. Although enemies, they deserve the credit of fighting well. In this engagement, which was of the severest character, the men and officers of the Eighth behaved with a gallantry and steadiness which drew from General McCook a public compliment on the battlefield. As on the day before, there were but few exceptions to this, while there were many instances of great gallantry displayed. Major John H. Isett, Captain P. C. Morhiser, A. A. A. G., of the Brigade, Captain (now Major) Shurtz, who was desperately wounded, Captain James W. Moore, Chaplain E. B. Doane, Lieutenants Henry Moreland, W. F. McCarron, C. F. Anderson, Jackson Morrow, W. T. Ogle, G. M. Detwiler, Jacob T. Haight (wounded), and John B. Loomis (killed), are fairly entitled to mention for their coolness and good conduct under very trying circumstances. Lieutenant H. H. Belfield, Adjutant, Lieutenant Cornelius Bennett, R. Q. M., and Lieutenant J. E. Pritchard, R. C. S., deserve special mention for their activity and zeal in assisting the regimental commander, and for bravery under fire. Many instances of great gallantry on the part of enlisted men came under my notice, but so great a period of time elapsed before I had the opportunity to prepare this paper that many of them have escaped my memory. It is a pleasure, however, to specially mention one Orderly Sergeant, John H. Huff, Company D, whose gallant bearing particularly attracted my attention, both at Lovejoy's and Newnan. The Governor of the State has promoted him to a Lieutenantcy upon my recommendation. Sergeants Peter H. Seay, Company A, R. Hoffmaster, Company K, Noah Lantz, Company H, William Pulliam, Company F, (since died,) J. D. Brown, Company H, Francis M. Thomas, Company I, (lost leg,) Thomas M. Strange, Company M, George J. Jenks, Company C, and James C. Rucker, Company L; Corporals Joseph Benson, Company A, George M. Snead, Company H; and Privates L. F. Deselin, Company D, Morris Lyons, Company K, William Mitchell, Company G (killed); Albert G. Briley, John R. Dowlis, James M. Nye, William Wimberly, D. W. Wood, Company I; John Paisley, Company M; William H. Brown, W. W. Elliott, Company H; C. Mason, George Dalson, Joseph S. Johnson, Company K; William Hart, J. J. Roberts, Company E; William Blood, Company M, and Joseph B. Chamberlain, Company A, deserve special mention for courage and good conduct. I take the greater pleasure in incorporating their names in this report, because the enlisted soldier, whose gallantry wins promotion for his commanding officer, rarely reaps any other reward than the consciousness of having done his duty. He bleeds and dies for his country, he wins her battles and crowns her standard with glory; at last he occupies six feet by two of her's or a foreign soil, and leaves no void behind, except in the hearts of those who call him father, son or brother. Two hundred and ninety-two enlisted men and twenty-four commissioned officers started on the McCook raid; twenty men and officers returned to our lines.

I cannot say all I would of the gallant dead, or the equally gallant living, who became the victims of remorseless traitors in the vile prisons of the Southern Confederacy. Their gallantry has endeared them to me and to their surviving comrades, and it is but a brief and well merited tribute to their sufferings to say that they bore them as men and patriots. May those who languish in Southern captivity soon be restored to their friends and regiment, to battle with renewed determination for their country. Let me here pay a just meed of praise to Dr. Daniel H. Warren, First Assistant Surgeon, who had not only undergone all the hardships and fatigue of the campaign untiringly, and ever ready cheerfully to discharge his utmost duty, but, when ordered by me to remain among our enemies, in charge of our wounded, acquiesced without a murmur, and he remained a prisoner for four and a half months, during which he waited on our sick and wounded, many of whom owe their lives to his assiduous devotion to his duties. He was relieved from a rebel prison in December, and has been commissioned Surgeon of the regiment by the Governor.

That portion of the regiment which had become dismounted during the campaign was concentrated at Kingston, Ga., under command of Major A. J. Price, a young but zealous and intelligent officer. He resigned his commission on Surgeon's certificate of disability in September, leaving the command of the regiment to Major Root. In the same month the Second Battalion proceeded by rail to Nashville, and thence to Franklin, Tenn., where it was soon joined by the other companies. The regiment took an active part in the pursuit of Wheeler, and afterwards of Forrest, fighting at Franklin, Campbellsville, Pulaski, and near Florence.

I reached the regiment and resumed command on the 7th of November, near Florence, Ala., soon after Hood began his advance on Nashville, and the Federal cavalry slowly fell back before him. Northeast of Columbia we had some skirmishing in which the Eighth had a few wounded. At Franklin, or rather east of Franklin, we made a stand, the rebels having become so confident as to be troublesome. General Schofield determined to punish their temerity, and, accordingly, with the infantry at Franklin, and the cavalry on the fords of the Harpeth above the town, he awaited their approach. They came on, and the fight which ensued is long to be remembered. A brilliant victory was achieved by both infantry and cavalry, and, so severely were the foe handled, they did not further molest the march of the army, but kept at a respectful distance during our march to Nashville, where General Thomas had determined to draw Hood in order to crush and destroy his army. On the 2d of December the cavalry crossed the river and encamped at Edgefield. On the 5th, the Eighth marched for Kentucky to press horses; returning on the 11th with two hundred and seventy-five fine animals. On the 13th, recrossed the Cumberland, and, after a halt of one day, moved on the 15th out of Nashville with the Grand Army, to attack Hood. The Eighth took place in line one mile south of the Charlotte pike, at the base of a high hill, from the east of which the battlefield was spread out like a panorama. The battlefield was a splendid sight. Deep columns of eager troops moved forward against the enemy, who had courted and merited the defeat he experienced by his boastful rashness. On our right was Johnson's Division of cavalry, on our left the Second Michigan, dismounted. Soon came the order to move, and the Eighth advanced by battalion, the Second in column under Captain Evans, the Third in line to the right and a little in rear of the Second Battalion, the First under Major Root, in column and reserve in rear of right flank of Third Battalion. In this form the regiments crossed a creek a quarter of a mile in front, when the enemy opened upon us. The Second and Third Battalions in line charged a hill in our front and cleared it of the enemy. A little skirmishing at nightfall was all the fighting that fell to the share of the Eighth on that glorious day. About dark our brigade moved over to the Hardin Pike. On the 16th, supported Hatch's right wing, whose division did some splendid fighting, and the army achieved the grand victory of that day. On the 17th, commenced the pursuit after Hood's defeated army. The Eighth captured one hundred and twenty-eight prisoners, including four commissioned officers. On the 18th, reached Spring Hill, when a sudden change of weather induced a halt of two days. On Christmas Day we passed through Pulaski, in pursuit still, and on the 31st reached Waterloo, Ala., and received orders to build winter quarters.

Before concluding this sketch it is just I should say that, from July 11th, the detachment at Kingston, Ga., and the whole regiment from September 25, 1864, was under the medical care of Dr. J. F. Smith, Assistant Surgeon. He has been with it during the whole fall campaign, and shared in all its hardships, and has proved himself a most efficient and skillful officer, as well as in all respects a gentleman. The health of the command is the best evidence of his efficiency. Dr. William H. Finley, Surgeon, was compelled, by the almost total failure of his health, to resign May last. While with the regiment he was an able and efficient officer, and I truly regret to lose his services. Major J. J. Brown was also compelled by sickness to resign, which he did in May, 1864. Major Brown was a good officer, and would have won an enviable reputation had he remained in the service. In summing up the history of the regiment for the year 1864, I may be permitted to say that it has seen about as hard and continuous service as has fallen to the lot of any command in the same time. It has, without including skirmishes, which are many, taken part in fifteen engagements, the casualties amounting to one hundred and sixty-eight, not including over two hundred men and officers taken prisoners.⁹

I am, General,

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. B. DORR, Colonel Eighth Cavalry.

The conclusion of the history of the regiment is embraced in the report of Adjutant Henry H. Belfield to Adjutant General Baker. The report describes one of the most remarkable cavalry expeditions of the war, in which the brigade to which the Eighth Iowa Cavalry was attached performed the most conspicuous and hazardous service. The compiler, therefore, deems it most appropriate to embrace the entire report of Adjutant Belfield in the concluding portion of this historical sketch. While the report is dated after the muster out of the regiment, it was recognized as official by the Adjutant General, coming, as it did, from the late Adjutant and executive officer of the regiment, and being in compliance with the request of General Baker. The report is, therefore, here quoted in full, as follows:

Dubuque, Iowa, December 9, 1865.

General: I have the honor of resuming the history of the Eighth Iowa Cavalry at the point where left by the pen of its lamented Colonel. Waterloo, Ala., on the Tennessee River, nearly opposite Eastport, Miss., was reached December 30, 1864. On the night of the 31st, the welcome orders were received to go into winter quarters, and were communicated to the regiment January 1, 1865. A fine camp was immediately laid out and, in a few days, substantial log houses were erected. At the same time detachments from the regiment were employed in scouting, guard and fatigue duty, etc.

In the night of January 16th, orders were received to move in the morning with four days' rations, and, on the 17th, the Eighth and two other regiments of our brigade (First Tennessee and Second Michigan) crossed the river and bivouacked beyond Eastport, supported by a brigade of infantry and a section of Napoleon guns. We made a rapid advance on Corinth, Miss., passing through Iuka and Barnesville on the 18th. On the 19th, the Eighth, having the advance, charged into Corinth, driving out Ross's Brigade of rebel cavalry. The object of the reconnaissance having been accomplished, we returned to Waterloo, having lost one man killed, James H. Crow, Company H. The intervening time having been busily employed in refitting, drilling, etc., on the 11th of March we again crossed to the south bank of the Tennessee, where, at Chickasaw, Ala., were rendezvoused, in a few days, the entire cavalry corps of the Military Division of the Mississippi, Brevet Major General James H. Wilson commanding, Brigadier General E. M. McCook (since Brevet Major General) commanding our division (the First) and Brigadier General John T. Croxton, our brigade (also the First).

On the 12th, we exchanged our Burnside carbines for the Spencer, and, on the 22d of March, about six hundred strong, we joined in the general advance. Colonel Dorr was in command of the regiment, and the only field officer with it, Lieutenant Colonel Barner and Major Root being on detached duty in the rear, and Majors Isett and Shurtz not having yet rejoined the regiment from captivity. Assistant Surgeon Smith, having obtained leave of absence, and Lieutenant Pritchard, being Acting Brigade Commissary, the Staff was reduced to Surgeon Warren, Adjutant Belfield and Quartermaster Bennett.

General Wilson's command marched by various roads in the general direction of Selma, Ala., meeting with but trifling obstacles, except in the bad roads and swollen rivers, until we reached Elyton, March 30th. Here our little brigade of fifteen hundred Spencers was detached from the main column and ordered to capture Tuscaloosa, while Wilson himself moved on Selma. No supply train or battery accompanied us; nothing but the allowance of pack mules, three ambulances and General Croxton's private baggage wagon. On the evening of March 31st, when about twenty-two miles northeast of Tuscaloosa, we unexpectedly found ourselves within two miles of Jackson's division of rebels, four thousand strong, with artillery. The enemy did not, however, attack our hastily formed line that evening. In the morning of April 1st, after some skirmishing and considerable maneuvering, General Croxton rapidly and quietly withdrew by an unfrequented road, marched some forty miles, and reached the Black Warrior by night at Johnson's Ferry, thirty-five miles from Tuscaloosa. By evening, April 2d, the whole brigade had crossed, by means of a little flatboat; and the evening of the 3d brought us to Tuscaloosa, though on the side of the river opposite from the town. The pickets were surprised, and the bridge captured and crossed by midnight. The Mayor formally surrendered the town to Colonel Dorr at 1 o'clock, a. m., April 4th, a few hours after the receipt of a message from General Jackson that he "had defeated the Yankees, and Tuscaloosa was safe." Destroying rebel supplies, scouting in all directions and constantly skirmishing with the enemy, who hung around us on all sides, we evacuated Tuscaloosa on the morning of the 5th, destroying the bridge over the Black Warrior, and two captured cannon. Then commenced one of the most remarkable campaigns of the war, known as the "Naval Expedition of Croxton's Brigade." Being wholly in the dark in regard to the position or movements of General Wilson, from whom we were cut off by Jackson, and being equally ignorant of the designs of Forrest, General Croxton proceeded with the greatest caution. Placing the Black Warrior between himself and Jackson, he moved out on the Columbus, Miss., road, turning, April 6th, in the direction of Eutaw. On the afternoon of that day he unexpectedly found himself in the presence of a greatly superior force of rebels, under Wirt Adams. We immediately recrossed the Sipsey, and made a forced march to Northport, opposite Tuscaloosa, taking possession of both places April 7th. In this retreat two of the three ambulances were abandoned, and the Seventh Kentucky Cavalry, being in the rear, was severely handled, but the enemy were handsomely repulsed by the Second Michigan Cavalry. The Eighth skirmished with the enemy on the flanks, losing several men captured. Others were cut off and made their way to our lines at various points. One of these, belonging to Company G, was drowned, while attempting to swim Sipsey River, pursued by the enemy.⁷

On the 8th of April we left Northport, and marched northeast. On account of the rains, not only were the roads in very bad condition, in some places nearly impassable, but the streams were very much swollen. Creeks had become rivers, rivers rushing torrents. The usual fords could be crossed only by swimming or ferrying. The ingenuity of the troops, however, was equal to the emergency. Bridges were repaired, canoes discovered hid in out of the way places, rafts were built, some mode of crossing always contrived, so that our progress was little impeded by the Sipsey, North, Black Water, Black Warrior, Coosa, Chattahoochee and other streams. The men and horses crossed most of the rivers by swimming, the arms, saddles, etc., being ferried in canoes, flats, or sugar troughs. April 15th, Haskins and Hughes, of Company A, were drowned while crossing the Sipsey. On the 16th, Bryant, of Company E, lost his life in the same stream. But little of interest occurred till April 22d, when we crossed the Coosa River and marched on Talladega. The Eighth was in advance, Lieutenant Crawford leading with Company L. General B. H. Hill's Brigade occupied the town. A few companies of the Eighth charged them with the sabre, routing them, Company L having one man wounded in the head, with a sabre cut, and two captured. Having replenished our commissariat, and destroyed government and railroad property, we moved, on the 23d, on the Blue Mountain Road in pursuit of General Hill. During the day his brigade was annihilated and his only piece of artillery captured. The Eighth was unfortunately in the rear, and had only a few skirmishes, in which, however, Wright, of Company E, and Standard, of Company K, were killed. The bridges, depots and rolling stock of the Blue Mountain Railroad were destroyed from Talladega to the terminus of the road, together with all the iron and niter works, which rendered that region of country so valuable to the rebels.

April 24th the Eighth was detached and sent to Jacksonville, Ala., which we captured, Company E, Lieutenants Anderson and Pease, leading and driving some hundred or more rebels from Blue Mountain to and through Jacksonville. We rejoined the brigade at night, having marched near forty miles. The prayer of the Eighth, to burn Newnan, Ga., seemed about to be granted, for, on the 25th, we moved out on the Newnan road. But, on the 26th, while crossing the Chattahoochee River, nine miles distant from Newnan, a white flag announced the surrender of Lee, the death of Lincoln, the Sherman-Johnston armistice, and prayed for a cessation of hostilities on the part of General Croxton. The General assented, and our designs on Newnan were frustrated. We passed through on the 27th, and proceeded by easy marches to Macon, Ga., reporting May 1st at that place to General Wilson, who had long before regarded us as lost.

On the 28th of May, while the regiment was lying in camp at Macon, Colonel Dorr died. Since the 14th he had been affected by what his physicians called neuralgic rheumatism, induced by the exposures of the campaign. Nothing serious, however, was apprehended by either Doctor Warren, Surgeon of the Regiment, or Doctor McCluer, Medical Director of the Cavalry Corps, both warm personal friends; and the Colonel attended to business every day, cheerful and uncomplaining, though apparently at times suffering severely. On the morning of the 28th he arose as usual, but soon retired to his tent. Seized with a congestive chill, he sank rapidly, and, without rallying, breathed his last about 8:30 o'clock, a. m., despite the most unremitting efforts of his attendants and friends. Having cared for his family, his last words were in regard to his regiment. His body was embalmed and sent home in charge of Lieutenant Bennett, escorted to the depot by the brave men whom he had so often led to victory. Colonel Dorr was a man of great personal bravery and strict integrity, an energetic and skillful officer, a rigid disciplinarian, an obedient soldier, an uncompromising patriot. Entering the service as Regimental Quartermaster of the Twelfth Iowa Infantry, he distinguished himself on the field of Shiloh and was captured with most of his regiment, when he might, without dishonor, have been safe in the rear. Escaping from a rebel prison, he obtained permission to raise the Eighth Cavalry, at a period which seemed the darkest hour of the War. At that time, when the value of mounted troops seemed to be unappreciated by the Government, Colonel Dorr saw their utility, and advocated their employment in large bodies as independent commands. Wilson's grand raid, in 1865, was but the embodiment and successful realization of ideas expressed by Colonel Dorr, in the spring of 1863. Wonderfully successful in raising his regiment, the Colonel sought active employment for himself and his command. The region between Nashville and (what is now) Johnsonville felt the vigor of his military and the equity of his civil administration. The histories of his regiment and brigade, recorded in former reports, attest his untiring energy, his sleepless vigilance, his freedom from all selfish motives, and his zealous care for his men, while utterly reckless of his own personal safety. Twice wounded, twice a prisoner, he emphatically led his men where none but the bravest dared to follow; as devoid of fear when directing or leading a charge as when viewing a dress parade. He was a good citizen, a fast friend, an enemy to all fraud and corruption, an honest man.

Shortly after the death of Colonel Dorr, Major Root arrived and assumed command of the regiment. He was soon followed by Colonel Barner. By order of General Wilson, the Eighth prepared for muster out, and left Macon for Nashville, July 28th. Reaching Atlanta, we were ordered to return and muster out at Macon. We reached Macon on July 29th, and, on August 13th, were mustered out by Lieutenant S. S. Culbertson, U. S. A. Leaving Macon August 14, 1865, we were carried by rail to Clinton, Iowa, August 21st, and were paid off August 27th, by Major E. S. Bailey.

I have the honor to be, General,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY H. BELFIELD,

Late Lieutenant and Adjutant, Eighth Iowa Cavalry.

BRIGADIER GENERAL N. B. BAKER, *Adjutant General of Iowa.*⁸

⁸Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1866, pages 153 to 156 inclusive.

It may well be said of the Eighth Iowa Cavalry that, during its somewhat less than two years of active service in the field, it made a record unsurpassed by that of any of the splendid regiments from its own or any other State. It is a record of which the survivors of the regiment may well be proud. But few of the men who marched and fought with the regiment are living at the time this historical sketch is written. A few years hence the last survivor will have crossed the river of time and joined his comrades on the shores of eternity. May the memory of their brave deeds be cherished by a grateful posterity.

NINTH REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER CAVALRY

The Ninth Regiment of Iowa Cavalry was organized under special order of the War Department, dated September 7, 1863. The twelve companies of which it was composed were ordered into quarters by the Governor of the State, between the dates, August 15 and November 1, 1863. Davenport, Iowa, was designated in the order as the rendezvous of the regiment and, at that place, on November 30, 1863, the enlisted men and officers of the twelve companies, together with the field and staff officers, were mustered into the service of the United States by Lieutenant Colonel William N. Grier, of the Regular Army. The aggregate number of the regiment, at the date of muster in, was 1,185.¹ Early additional enlistments brought the number up to the maximum strength of a cavalry regiment. A large number of men who desired to join the regiment had reported at the rendezvous after its ranks had been filled, and, as they could not be mustered into the Ninth Cavalry, were assigned to other Iowa military organizations, then being raised, or to regiments already in the field. Lieutenant Colonel M. M. Trumbull, formerly of the Third Iowa Infantry, was chosen as the Colonel of the Ninth Cavalry, and no better choice could have been made. He had entered the service at the commencement of the war, as Captain of Company I, of the Third Infantry, and had won well-deserved promotion to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel in that regiment. He was wounded at the battle of Shiloh, and subsequently commanded his old regiment, and won distinguished honor at the battle of Matamora.² He resigned to accept the appointment of Assistant Adjutant General of Iowa, and was serving in that capacity when he was appointed Colonel of the Ninth Cavalry by Governor Kirkwood. Lieutenant Colonel John P. Knight was transferred from the Third Iowa Infantry, where he had served with honor as First Lieutenant and Captain, and Major Edgar T. Ensign had also served with equal honor as Captain in the Second Iowa Infantry. Indeed, the roster of the Ninth Iowa Cavalry reveals the fact that nearly all its field and staff, as well as its company officers, had seen service in other Iowa regiments, which was also true as to a large number of the enlisted men. Nearly every county in the State was represented in the regiment. In the region of country to which its operations were confined, the regiment did not have the opportunity—which its gallant commander and his officers and men so ardently desired—to make a great battle record. However, as will be seen in this brief historical sketch of its operations, the Ninth Iowa Cavalry performed important and valuable service in the field to which it was assigned. Major and Brevet Colonel Edgar T. Ensign has furnished the Adjutant General of Iowa with a carefully detailed historical memoranda of the movements and operations of his regiment, embracing the entire period of its service.³ To that officer the compiler is indebted for the main portion of the material which enables him to prepare the following condensed history. It will be his endeavor, while omitting some of the less important details, to include all the most essential points in the history of the regiment.

The first camp of the regiment was located near the city of Davenport, Iowa, and was called "Camp Roberts," but was subsequently changed to "Camp Kinsman," where comfortable barracks had been constructed. There, while awaiting its supply of horses, arms and other equipments, the men received preliminary instruction in their duties. Officers' schools were established, and the necessity for the enforcement of strict discipline was inculcated. On December 8, 1863, Colonel Trumbull received orders to move his regiment to St. Louis. At that time about 750 horses had been furnished. These, together with the camp equipage and other military stores, required several trains of cars for transportation, and it took three days to effect the transfer of the regiment from Davenport to St. Louis, where it arrived December 11th. The first camp was located on the ground occupied by the rebel troops at the commencement of the war—old "Camp Jackson." There the regiment remained in tents, suffering much from the severity of the weather, until December 16th, when it was moved into quarters at Benton Barracks. In this great camp of instruction the men and officers of the regiment were subjected to a rigid and thorough training. The officers were required to pass an examination before a military board, and all, save one, passed the ordeal with credit. With reference to the one exception, Major Ensign says: "Owing to illness, and absence of other officers of his company, which threw on him all, or nearly all, their duties and responsibilities, he was unable to spare the time requisite to master all the technicalities of cavalry tactics and army regulations." Nevertheless, he was a good officer, and his brother officers sympathized deeply with him, and felt that great injustice had been done in rejecting him. In the early days of the war, officers of volunteer regiments were not required to pass such rigid examination. They were hurried to the field, with but scant opportunity for instruction, and learned their duties in the hard school of actual warfare. There is no doubt, however, that the Ninth Iowa Cavalry was better prepared for effective service in the field, after its long period of training at Benton Barracks, than were any of the Iowa regiments which had preceded it, at the time they took the field. With much less careful instruction it might have performed all the duties subsequently required of it equally well, but, if it had been sent with the other Iowa cavalry regiments, where great battles were fought, the wisdom of the longer period of preparation would have had practical demonstration.

The horses of the regiment were selected by a board of its own officers. They were fine animals. Each squadron was supplied with horses of a uniform color, and the regiment, when mounted and on parade, was greatly admired for its handsome appearance. At an inspection and review held by General Davidson, Chief of Cavalry, at Benton Barracks, he declared the Ninth Iowa the best mounted regiment he had seen during his nineteen years of service as a cavalry officer in the Regular Army. During a portion of the time of its stay at Benton Barracks, details were made from the regiment for guards in the city of St. Louis, and detachments were sent to adjacent parts of Missouri and Illinois. Captain Flick's Company (B) was for several weeks stationed at Alton, Ill., as guards to a large number of rebel prisoners confined at that place. Captain Reed's Company (A) was employed in breaking up and dispersing secret rebel organizations in Southern Illinois and in capturing deserters from the Union Army. On April 14, 1864, the First Battalion, under command of Major Ensign, moved by rail to Rolla, Mo., and went into camp there. A few days later, three companies of the Second Battalion, commanded by Major Drummond, joined the First Battalion at Rolla. On the 18th, two more companies arrived there, but were turned back without leaving the cars. It had been intended to concentrate the regiment at Rolla, from which place it was to march to Little Rock, Ark., but, the country between those points having been found almost destitute of forage, it was not possible to move the regiment over it. The detachments were therefore ordered to return to St. Louis. On April 19th the regiment moved to Jefferson Barracks, twelve miles south of St. Louis, where it went into camp in tents, just outside the Barracks.

Early on the morning of May 3d there came an order from Department Headquarters for the immediate detail of one hundred and fifty men and a field officer to report at once. The duty was assigned to Major Ensign, who, with detachments from three companies, comprising the required number of men, rode rapidly into the city and reported to General Rosecrans. The Major was instructed to proceed with his command to Hannibal, Mo., by boat, and thence to march to Palmyra, to intercept the movement of the notorious guerrilla, Quantrell, and his band. That fiend in human form was moving towards Quincy, Ill., after perpetrating his horrid crime of murdering defenseless citizens at Lawrence, Kans. Major Ensign at once embarked his detachment on the steamer "Die Vernon" and proceeded to Hannibal, where he disembarked and marched rapidly to Palmyra, as directed. The guerrilla leader had been apprised of his approach, however, and made a rapid retreat. Following his usual method when pursued, he ordered his followers to separate, each man to take care of himself, with orders to reassemble at some designated rendezvous, at a remote distance. Major Ensign's command scouted the country for ten days, and succeeded in capturing a few of the guerrillas; but their leader and most of his band made good their escape. Having been relieved of the duty of hunting guerrillas, by a detachment of the Seventh Kansas Cavalry, on the 15th of May the Major returned with his detachment to the camp of the regiment at Jefferson Barracks. Upon his arrival, he found the regiment under orders to proceed to Devall's Bluff, Ark.

Major Drummond, with Companies B and E, embarked on the first boat, other detachments following until May 19th, when Colonel Trumbull embarked with the last detachment, and, on May 23d, the entire regiment was in camp at Devall's Bluff. Soon after the arrival of the first detachment, Major Drummond had a skirmish with a small force of the enemy, who rapidly retreated, carrying with them a number of Government animals which were being herded near the post. The Major succeeded in recovering some of the animals, but the rebels were well mounted, and, having a thorough knowledge of the country, succeeded in eluding their pursuers and escaped to the northward through the swamps. Devall's Bluff was an important post, being the depot from which all the supplies for the army commanded by General Steele were forwarded. The failure of General Banks' Red River Expedition had compelled General Steele to fall back to Little Rock, which was the headquarters of his army. The rebel forces under General Price constantly threatened the line of road over which the supplies for General Steele's army were conveyed, and which had to be heavily guarded. On May 24, 1864, Colonel Trumbull was assigned to the command of the post at Devall's Bluff. He immediately proceeded to put the post in the best possible state of defense against the threatened attack of the enemy. Heavy fortifications were constructed, guarding the approaches by land, while the timber between the river and the line of works was cut down, and all obstructions removed from the river view, in order that the gunboats might take an important part in the anticipated battle. The garrison, under command of Colonel Trumbull, consisted of his own regiment (the Ninth Iowa Cavalry), the Third Michigan Cavalry, the Third United States Cavalry (of the Regular Army), a part of the Eighth Missouri Cavalry, the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Illinois Infantry, one battery (the Second Missouri Artillery) and about one hundred negro troops. One of the fleet of gunboats was stationed in the river, off shore. As detachments of cavalry were constantly required for extensive scouting and guard duty, the defensive force was none too large, in view of the number of the rebel forces under General Price which were expected to engage in the attack. Major Drummond, with four companies of the Ninth Iowa Cavalry, was sent to the vicinity of West Point, on White River, to keep constant watch of the movements of the enemy and give timely warning of his advance. Major Ensign was placed in charge of the pickets and outposts. All the troops composing the garrison were worked incessantly. The constant arrival of transports, conveying supplies, unloading the stores and reloading them upon the cars for shipment to Little Rock, employed hundreds of men, while hundreds more were employed in strengthening the defenses, scouting in the surrounding country, on picket duty, guarding the line of communication with General Steele, and the performance of the regular camp duties, demanding the most constant activity and untiring energy upon the part of both officers and men.

On the 29th of May, Major Haddock returned with a detachment of four companies of the Ninth Cavalry from a scout down towards the mouth of the Arkansas River, and reported the assembling of a force of rebels, under the command of General Marmaduke, on the south side of the river. Major Drummond's detachment returned the next day, reporting a skirmish with a portion of the rebel force commanded by General Shelby. Everything seemed to indicate a concentration of rebel troops for the purpose of attempting the capture of Devall's Bluff. A few days later, however, the enemy began aggressive movements against the less strongly defended outposts, rendering it necessary to send reinforcements from Devall's Bluff to the points most liable to be attacked. On June 4th, Major Ensign was sent with Companies A, C, D and E, of the Ninth, to the neighborhood of Searcy, on the Little Red River, with instructions to make a thorough scout in the vicinity of the road leading to the crossing of that stream and beyond it. He found that a considerable body of rebel troops, with some artillery, under General Shelby, were located near Batesville. Captains Young and Dean, with their Companies (C and E), were sent still farther into the country, to the north and west, and returned without encountering the enemy, but with valuable information. Major Ensign lost two of his men—captured by the enemy—while on this scout. On June 13th the detachment moved to Bayou Two Prairies, on the railroad between Devall's Bluff and Little Rock, and there found the balance of the Ninth Iowa, and the Eighth Missouri Cavalry, with Colonel W. F. Geiger, of the latter regiment, in command. A small stockade was the only defensive works there. Major Drummond, with his battalion (Companies B, E, H and L), was again sent northward, and, on the 29th of June, sent a dispatch from Austin, stating that he had located the rebel General Shelby on that side of the Little Red River. Colonel Trumbull, with what men of his regiment could be mounted, moved promptly to join Major Drummond, with the intention of attacking the rebel force, but found it to be only a portion of General Shelby's command, which scattered and fled upon the approach of Colonel Trumbull's command. After thoroughly scouting the country, and discovering no further traces of the elusive enemy, Colonel Trumbull returned with his regiment to Bayou Two Prairies.

Major Ensign, commanding the advanced guard of the regiment, arrived at the bayou before the main part of the regiment reached it, and, by order of Colonel Geiger, joined the Eighth Missouri Cavalry, with one hundred men of the Ninth, and moved to Clarendon, thence to Devall's Bluff, there to participate in another expedition against the wily rebel leader, General Shelby. While engaging the attention of Colonel Trumbull, on the Little Red River, with a portion of his command, Shelby had crossed the White River with his main force, and, by a sudden march southward to Clarendon, succeeded in surprising and destroying a United States gunboat lying at that place. General E. A. Carr, then commanding the district of Little Rock, rapidly assembled a force of infantry, cavalry and artillery, and gave chase. In his retreat towards Augusta, General Shelby was hard pressed by his pursuers, and fought them at every available point. Heavy skirmishing was performed by the cavalry, the rebels always retreating before the infantry could be brought forward. Major Ensign's detachment of the Ninth Iowa kept with the advance, and, by a hazardous night reconnaissance, located the enemy's position and won the special thanks of the General commanding. On the first day's advance from Clarendon, the little detachment had pushed forward with so much audacity that it came very near reaching and capturing the rebel General, who was giving his personal attention to the movements of his rear guard. Lieutenants Jacobs, of Company B, and Prole, of Company G, were especially commended for their gallant behavior. One of the guns, taken from the gunboat by the rebels, was recovered, and two field pieces were captured from the enemy. The loss of the detachment was two or three killed and a few wounded, but less than that inflicted upon the enemy.⁴ Several prisoners were taken by the detachment. Captain Young, in command of Companies C, I and F, of the Ninth, joined Major Ensign at Clarendon on the return march. The two detachments then marched to Devall's Bluff, and found the remainder of the regiment in its old camp at that place. There was much sickness among the troops, caused by the intensely hot weather, impure water and miasma from the surrounding marshes. Many of the men died from the diseases thus engendered. There was also great scarcity of forage. The hot weather and lack of rain had caused the grass to become parched and destitute of nutriment, and for many days the men had to cut branches from the trees and gather cane from the swamps to keep the horses and mules from starvation.

On July 11th, Colonel Trumbull, with a portion of his regiment, had a brief skirmish with a rebel cavalry force, which made a rapid retreat. Pursuit could not be successfully made, owing to the poor condition of the horses. On July 13th, Major Drummond, with a detachment of the regiment, crossed the White River, and made a successful foraging expedition, during which he met and had a slight skirmish with a small force of the enemy, capturing a few of them with their arms and horses. He returned to camp with quite a drove of cattle, mules and horses, which he had gathered up in the country through which he passed. About the same time Colonel Trumbull, with two hundred and thirty men of his regiment, engaged in a similar expedition, in another direction, and with equally satisfactory results. He returned to Devall's Bluff on July 15th. Information having been received that a strong force of rebels was about to occupy Saint Charles,—a landing on White River, midway between its mouth and Devall's Bluff,—a brigade of troops, under command of General Lee, was hurried from Morganza, La., to Saint Charles. General Lee had about two thousand infantry, a few pieces of artillery and a gunboat, but no cavalry. To supply that want, a part of the Ninth Iowa Cavalry, under command of Major Ensign, was sent to join General Lee's command. The detachment reached Saint Charles two days after the arrival of General Lee, who had taken a strong position and was awaiting the attack of the enemy, of whose location and movements, however, he had gained no information. Major Ensign's command was at once utilized in exploring the surrounding country in search of the enemy, and, after a rapid march on July 28th, came in sight of a force of rebels on Bayou Metoe. The rebels made a hasty retreat to the south side of the Arkansas River. Major Ensign then turned to the south and east, drove in the rebel pickets near Arkansas Post, and, moving down the north branch of the river for several miles, encountered and dispersed small parties of the enemy, taking some prisoners. From the prisoners the Major obtained the information that a large force of rebels was in camp upon the opposite side of the river. He at once moved his small command from that dangerous neighborhood and, marching rapidly, reached Saint Charles on July 30th, having fully accomplished the object of the expedition. The rebel General, having learned of the occupation of Saint Charles by a Federal force amply sufficient to defend it, abandoned his plan for attacking that place and rejoined the main rebel army, under General Price. After being advised of the retirement of the rebel force, by scouting parties from Major Ensign's detachment, General Lee, leaving a sufficient force to defend the post at Saint Charles, returned with the rest of his command to Morganza. About the same time Major Ensign returned with his detachment to Devall's Bluff, taking with him many negroes, as recruits for the colored regiments, also many horses and mules which he had captured.

On the 5th of August, the Ninth Iowa Cavalry, together with the other regiments composing its brigade, moved northward to take part in a cavalry expedition, commanded by Brigadier General Joseph R. West, which it joined near Searcy. The entire force, numbering nearly 3,000 men, crossed the Little Red River at Searcy, and moved to a point on White River, above Augusta. The rebel General Shelby's force numbered about 6,000 men, but, as he had detached about one-half his men on an expedition against Helena, it was General West's purpose to meet him before his command could be reunited. It had been arranged to have transports sent to Augusta, to ferry the troops across White River. The boats failed to come, and General West was obliged to get his cavalry across the river by swimming. So much time was consumed that, before one-half the troops had crossed the river, news was received that the rebel force sent to Helena had rejoined General Shelby. The discrepancy in numbers was too great to justify General West in risking a general engagement in the open field. He therefore decided to fall back to the defenses at Devall's Bluff and Little Rock. The retreat was successfully accomplished. General Shelby followed in pursuit, and there was some skirmishing with his advance guard, but the troops safely reached their strongly fortified encampments, which the rebel General had the good judgment to refrain from attacking. The condition of the horses at this time was very poor. They had been greatly overworked in the long scouts which had been made, had not been supplied with a sufficiency of forage, and there were not enough really serviceable horses in the whole brigade to properly mount one regiment.

On the 24th of August, the rebel General Shelby, who had pursued a detachment sent out from Devall's Bluff on a scouting expedition and followed it almost to the line of defenses, succeeded in surprising a party of soldiers belonging to the post, who were making hay on the prairie near Ashley Station, and, after a very stubborn resistance, captured part of them, dispersed the balance and burned the hay. As soon as the men who had managed to escape reached the post, all the men who could be mounted on serviceable horses, numbering 750, under the command of Colonel Geiger of the Eighth Missouri, started in pursuit of the rebel force, which was encountered on the open prairie. The rebel force outnumbered that of Colonel Geiger in the proportion of three to one, but the Colonel resolved to make the attack. He disposed of his force in such manner as to avoid being surrounded and cut off from retreat. The Ninth Iowa was placed in position to guard the line of retreat, in case it became necessary, and was not engaged in the heaviest of the fighting which ensued, but it bravely performed its duty in the position to which it was assigned. The Missouri regiments, led by Colonel Geiger, boldly charged the enemy, who gave way, under the impression that the attacking party was merely the advance of a larger force. The rebels lost heavily in killed and wounded, their loss being much greater than that of the Union troops, owing to the impetuosity with which the attack was made, and to the superior quality of the arms of the attacking force. The loss in Colonel Geiger's command, in killed and wounded, was sixty. No prisoners were taken by either side. The loss of the Ninth Iowa, on account of the position to which it was assigned, was small, as compared with that of the regiments which led the advance and charged the rebel line. The rebel force retreated under cover of the darkness, which came on soon after the fighting began. Colonel Geiger, and all the troops under his command, received high official commendation for their admirable conduct in this spirited cavalry engagement.

On August 27th, Colonel Trumbull marched with most of his regiment upon another cavalry expedition. He joined other troops from Little Rock, and the expedition, under command of General West, made a long and arduous march through the rough and broken country lying between the Little Red and White Rivers. The expedition encountered no considerable bodies of the enemy. Upon its return, the brigade, consisting of the Ninth Iowa and the Eighth and Eleventh Missouri, was halted at Austin, where it went into camp. Sixty men of the Ninth Iowa, with Captain Young and Lieutenant Holmes, who had been left at Devall's Bluff, embarked on a transport to take the expedition but, meeting with a largely superior force of the enemy, for Clarendon, September 1st. They were instructed to scout the country between Clarendon and the Arkansas River, and to then return to Devall's Bluff by land, which duty was successfully accomplished. A small detachment of twenty men of the Ninth Iowa was sent to act as scouts for a force of infantry, which it accompanied upon a transport up the White River. These troops had orders to co-operate with those under the command of General West, whom they were to meet at a designated point on the river. Not meeting General West's troops, at the point indicated, the scouts from the Ninth Iowa were ordered to disembark and make the effort to communicate with the General. The little detachment made a heroic attempt to overtake the expedition but, meeting with a largely superior force of the enemy, was overpowered, and, after a desperate resistance, nearly all the men were either killed or captured. It was in the performance of such hazardous scouting duty that most of the casualties of the Ninth Iowa Cavalry were sustained. It required a high degree of courage and fortitude, on the part of the men composing these small scouting parties, to ride along the lonely forest roads, not knowing at what moment they would be attacked by the enemy concealed in ambush. The character of the service was much the same as that which was required in the early history of the country, in fighting Indians, and the fate of those who fell into the hands of the rebels was about as much to be dreaded as that which befell the prisoners in the hands of savages. While there were exceptional cases, in which Union prisoners received humane treatment, it is a well known fact of history that, as a rule, their treatment was marked with great inhumanity.

On the 8th of September, that portion of the brigade which had been stationed at Devall's Bluff—including the Ninth Iowa—was ordered to move to Austin and join the main command. About this time the rebel General Price had concentrated his army and had commenced his last great campaign, extending his operations into the states of Missouri and Kansas, where, in a series of hard-fought battles, his army was defeated with heavy loss and compelled to retreat into the mountains of Arkansas. An expedition, composed of one division of cavalry and one of infantry, marched from Memphis to join in the pursuit of Price's army. On September 18th, the expedition passed through Austin on its march to the Missouri border. For the purpose of bringing back his supply train, General Mower—the officer in command—requested a detail of troops from the post at Austin, and Major Ensign, with 225 men of the Ninth Iowa Cavalry, was assigned to that duty. The detachment proceeded with the command of General Mower to the crossing of White River and, from that point, returned with the long train of unloaded wagons to Brownsville Station. The return march over the mountain roads was difficult and dangerous, but, by making long and rapid marches, the railroad was reached on September 25th, without losing any of the wagons and without any casualties in the command. In the meantime the brigade had been moved to Brownsville, from which point all supplies were received and forwarded. Quarters for the men and stables for the horses were constructed, much of the material for that purpose being obtained by the tearing down of abandoned houses and public buildings. Comfortable winter quarters were thus secured for the soldiers and their horses, but, as will be seen from the operations that were carried on during the winter, comparatively few of the men remained to occupy these quarters.

On October 30th, a forage train, guarded by a detachment from the Ninth Iowa, was attacked by a force of rebels, and two teamsters were mortally wounded and four captured. Those who escaped brought the news to camp, and a detachment from the regiment was immediately sent to the place where the attack was made. In the meantime, however, a detachment from the Eleventh Missouri, returning from a scout, had heard the firing and hastened to the rescue. The rebels were forced to abandon most of their plunder. The detachment from the Ninth Iowa did not reach the scene of conflict until the rebels were in full retreat, and, as night had fallen, could accomplish nothing beyond returning to camp with the wounded men and rescued property. At daylight Major Ensign, in command of a detachment from his regiment, went in pursuit of the rebels, but did not succeed in overtaking them.

Early in November fragments of the rebel General Price's defeated and demoralized army were retreating toward the mountains, and that portion of the Ninth Iowa, and the other cavalry troops then at Brownsville, started in pursuit on November 4th. The line of march was through Peach Orchard Gap, El Paso and Springfield, and on to Norristown and Dardanelle. On November 15th, Major Drummond, with three hundred men of his regiment, scouted the country south of the river. Major Drummond's detachment and others, moving in different directions, encountered straggling parties of Price's retreating army and captured many of them, without any serious engagements. The troops which had been engaged in the pursuit returned to Brownsville, reaching that place on the night of November 18th. A few days previous to the starting of this last expedition, Lieutenant Colonel John P. Knight, of the Ninth Iowa, with five hundred men of the brigade, had commenced a march to Fort Smith, escorting thither Major General F. J. Herron. Their route lay near the line of march of General Price's retreating rebel army, with portions of which Lieutenant Colonel Knight's detachment had several skirmishes, in one of which a rebel officer was killed and a number of his men captured, together with one hundred and thirty head of cattle which they were driving. Lieutenant Colonel Knight returned with his detachment to Brownsville on the 26th of November, having marched over five hundred miles. General Herron subsequently wrote a letter in which he acknowledged the very efficient service of the detachment and its commander.

During the remainder of November, Major Drummond, with two hundred men of the regiment and a part of the Eighth Missouri, performed very important service in guarding some government transports which had grounded at low water in the Arkansas River above Lewisburg. The Major remained upon this duty, and scouting in the surrounding country with portions of his detachment, until the close of December, when, with the rise in the river, the transports were enabled to proceed upon their course, and the troops rejoined the brigade at Brownsville. On December 6th, Lieutenant Harmon of Company E, being in command of fifty men of the regiment, encountered a superior force of the rebel leader Rayburn's troops near Brownsville. Lieutenant Harmon's detachment had two men wounded and several horses killed. The rebels sustained a much heavier loss.

Early in January, 1865, about 1,000 men of the brigade, under command of Colonel Geiger, began a march through the region of country lying between Brownsville and Memphis, Tenn., for the purpose of dispersing such forces of the enemy as might still be found infesting that section of the country, and destroying their means of subsistence. The portion of the Ninth Iowa Cavalry which accompanied the expedition was commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Knight. The men and officers endured great hardship and suffering upon this march. During the previous month very heavy rains had fallen and the roads were in many places under water. The rains continued during the greater portion of the march. Major Ensign says: "On one day we only made six miles and, when at night we reached a point between the Little Red and White Rivers, could not find enough dry land for a camping place. Passing the night there, and by dint of hard work keeping the animals and wagons from miring down in the mud and water, and throwing away tents and other camp equipage to lighten the train, we resumed the march the next morning in the midst of a snow storm. Thus, fighting the elements, we arrived at Augusta January 11th, having been ferried over White River by the steamer Belle Peoria." The weather cleared somewhat, the march was resumed, and the object of the expedition successfully accomplished. Detachments from the command were sent out in different directions, small bodies of the enemy were encountered and dispersed, and quite a number of rebels were captured, together with many horses and mules. The command reached Brownsville on January 28th. On the day before, with a small detachment, Major Ensign had marched from Searcy to Brownsville, in advance of the main command, and, when near Austin, had captured two noted bushwhackers, with their horses, arms and equipments; the Major and Adjutant Wayne had rendered valuable assistance to Lieutenant Colonel Knight during this long and, in some respects, most memorable march in which any portion of the regiment had been engaged.

During the remainder of the winter of 1865 there was the usual amount of scouting, but no incident of special importance occurred, except the daring attempt of Major Ensign and a small detachment of the Ninth Iowa to secure the capture of the notorious guerrilla chief, Rayburn. This man had given incessant annoyance to the Union troops, and General Steele had offered a large reward for his death or capture. A few soldiers from the Union army, who had been guilty of committing acts of pillage in the neighboring country, for which they had subjected themselves to severe punishment, and which they knew would be received when their crimes were discovered, gave themselves over to a course of complete outlawry, by deserting and joining the band of the guerrilla leader. The capture of these deserters was a matter of equal importance to that of capturing Rayburn and his band. Major Ensign led his detachment through devious paths of the woods and mountains, marching mostly at night, until they reached the neighborhood of Rayburn's camp, without discovery. Concealing themselves in ambush near a bridge, they kept a close watch for the approach of the rebels. On the night of April 2d, they succeeded in quietly capturing a couple of prisoners, and, from them, learned that Rayburn had himself made prisoners of the deserters, not daring to trust them as members of his band, and had sent word to General Steele that he would return them to him, if he could be allowed the necessary facilities for doing so, without taking too great risk of the capture of himself or his band of followers. The Major also learned that Rayburn had left his camp and retreated still farther into the mountains, and that any further effort to secure his capture at that time would prove futile, for the reason that he felt assured that the rebels had become apprised of his approach. It then became a matter of concern to avoid being ambushed on the return march. By celerity of movement and another all night march the detachment reached Brownsville, after an absence of eight days and nights. The subsequent fate of the guerrilla chief and his followers and that of the deserters is not revealed by the record.

The news of the fall of Richmond and the surrender of Lee's army reached the camp at Brownsville on April 11, 1865, and was fully confirmed the next day, causing great rejoicing. Then came the news of the assassination of President Lincoln. The soldiers were at first almost wild in their indignation and desire for vengeance, and it required the exercise of the strongest military discipline to prevent an attack upon the military prison at Little Rock, where rebel prisoners were confined, it having been reported that some of them had expressed satisfaction upon hearing of the death of that great and good man.

The remainder of the history of the operations of the Ninth Iowa Cavalry is soon told. While the war was practically over, the conditions in those states which had been most active in the rebellion against the government was such as to render military occupation necessary for a considerable length of time. In those states the functions of civil government had been almost completely paralyzed during the progress of the war, and the lawless element in every community could only be restrained by the presence of Federal troops. There was, perhaps, no section of the South where lawlessness and disregard for human life was more prevalent than in the mountainous regions of Arkansas, where roving bands of outlaws were still numerous. While it was obvious that a sufficient number of troops would have to be retained in the service to assist the state and local authorities in regaining control, the volunteer soldiers felt that their duties should have ended with the putting down of the rebellion against the general government. Both officers and men felt that it was the duty of the government to increase the strength of the Regular Army, so that they might be relieved and allowed to return to their homes. While they were given the assurance that this would be done as soon as possible, the men were impatient, and a spirit of insubordination was manifested on the part of some of them. Quite a number of desertions had occurred. The necessity for the strictest enforcement of discipline became apparent, and the officers and the better element among the enlisted men asserted themselves so effectually that the former good discipline was soon restored. This feeling of discontent was not more prominent in the Ninth Iowa Cavalry than in any of the other regiments from Iowa. It was quite general at that time, but never reached a critical stage. The men soon came to appreciate the necessity of the situation, and settled into a feeling of patient waiting for the time when their services would be no longer required and they would be honorably discharged.

On June 11th, the regiment marched from Brownsville to Lewisburg. About one-half the companies were sent to garrison different posts, while the other half were retained at Lewisburg. Colonel Trumbull, who had been promoted to Brevet Brigadier General, was in command of the post, and Lieutenant Colonel Knight succeeded to the command of the regiment. Major Wayne, who had been promoted from Adjutant, was on detached duty at Dardanelle, and Major Ensign had been assigned to duty as Acting Assistant Inspector General, at Little Rock. Subsequently General Trumbull was assigned to the command of the more important post at Fort Smith, and a general change was made in the assignments of the captains and their companies to different stations. In September, Major Ensign, acting under instructions from the Department Commander, visited the southeastern counties of Arkansas, to ascertain the progress made towards the reorganization of civil government, and to see if it were necessary for the military to afford the civil authorities additional facilities to aid in the performance of their duties. Returning from the trip on the 2d of October, he submitted his official report, after which he tendered his resignation, which was accepted on October 22d, and he was honorably discharged from the service. Major Drimmond had resigned in June and received an honorable discharge. These officers were both held in the highest esteem by their brother officers and by the men of the regiment, and much regret was shown when they took their departure. Lieutenant Cheney, Quartermaster, and Lieutenant Tilford, Commissary of the regiment, are mentioned in the record for the very efficient manner in which they performed their duty, in procuring the necessary supplies for the command, sometimes under very difficult circumstances. The surgeons and company officers are also generally commended for the faithful and efficient discharge of their duties. There were numerous changes in the field and staff and in the company organizations during the term of service of the regiment, all of which will be found noted in the subjoined roster.

In January, 1866, a detachment of the regiment was sent through the Indian Territory to Texas, for the purpose of guarding a train of government wagons, loaded with supplies for the troops retained on duty in that state. The detachment was absent several weeks on this duty. During the remainder of their service, the different companies of the regiment rendered important service at their respective stations, in sustaining the officers of the civil government, both Federal and State, in the enforcement of law and order. They succeeded in hunting down, killing and capturing nearly all the outlaws and desperadoes who had infested the country and, when the time came for their departure, the conditions were so greatly improved that life and property were probably as well protected as before the commencement of the war.

On February 16, 1866, Brevet Major General H. J. Hunt, in command of the Frontier District, Department of Arkansas, issued from his headquarters at Fort Smith an order directing the relief from duty of the Ninth Iowa Cavalry, by the Third United States Cavalry, after which the regiment was ordered to proceed to Little Rock, Ark., to be mustered out of service. The following commendatory paragraph is quoted from the order:

The General commanding takes this occasion to convey to Brevet Brigadier General Trumbull, and the officers and men of his regiment, his appreciation of the good service they have rendered while under his command, and the excellence of their discipline, which has frequently elicited the commendations of the citizens of the district. To the commanders of detached posts, Captains Reed, at Clarksville, Flick, at Fayetteville, and Lambert (specially), at Van Buren, his thanks are due for the manner in which they have performed their duties—where they often had to act upon their own judgment.

General Trumbull, who was still on duty as Post Commander at Fort Smith, when his regiment was ordered to assemble at Little Rock to be mustered out, sent a farewell letter, which was read to the regiment on parade. The letter is here quoted as follows:

HEADQUARTERS NINTH IOWA CAVALRY VOLUNTEERS,
FORT SMITH, ARK., FEB. 19, 1866.

TO THE OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS OF THE NINTH IOWA CAVALRY:

Gentlemen: We are about to separate. Our work is done. The flag of the Republic waves triumphantly over all her ancient domain. In the great struggle which has passed, you have done well, and you leave the service carrying with you a noble tribute of approbation from the Major General commanding the district, one of the greatest soldiers of the country. The hardships and dangers you have undergone have been great, and many of our comrades have sunk by the wayside. The discipline has been severe but it was necessary to make soldiers of you. In the new positions you are to assume, preserve your soldiers' name untained, and, should the President of the United States again order the long roll beaten, I trust we shall all be ready to fall in.

May prosperity and happiness attend you all. Comrades, I bid you farewell.

M. M. TRUMBULL, Colonel

Ninth Iowa Cavalry Volunteers and Brevet Brigadier General U. S. V.⁵

The companies of the regiment were all mustered out of the service of the United States at the city of Little Rock, Ark., but upon different dates. Companies E, F, G, H, K, L and M were mustered out on February 3, 1866; the field and staff officers and Companies A, C and D were mustered out February 28, 1866; Company I was mustered out March 15, 1866; and Company B was mustered out March 23, 1866. All officers and enlisted men, not otherwise accounted for, were mustered out as with their respective organizations.⁶ It will thus be seen that a period of nearly two years and four months had elapsed between the muster in of the regiment and the muster out of its last company. During its service in the South the regiment marched over 2,000 miles, was conveyed by steamboat and rail 1,700 miles, and the marches of its various detachments approximated 8,000 miles. The casualties sustained by the regiment—killed in action, died from the effects of wounds and from disease, discharged for disability incurred from wounds or sickness, including transfers—number 309 enlisted men and officers.

The survivors of the Ninth Iowa Cavalry may well be proud of the record made by their regiment. While the field to which its operations were confined was not the scene of any of the great battles of the war, in which so many of the regiments from Iowa participated with distinguished honor to themselves and their State, yet the Ninth Cavalry faithfully performed all the duties to which it was assigned. Its officers and men had bravely met and fought the enemy in minor engagements, and they would have gladly welcomed an order—for which they waited in vain—to participate in the great battles which marked the closing campaigns of the war. The regiment is, therefore, justly entitled to as honorable a place in the military history of its State as that of any of the long line of Iowa regiments which went forth at the call of the President of the United States and contributed so largely to the salvation and perpetuation of the best government ever instituted among men.

⁵The record from which the last quotations are made can be found on page 569, Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1867, Vol. 2.

Sioux City
Volunteer Cavalry Company

SIOUX CITY VOLUNTEER CAVALRY COMPANY

This company was composed of men who enlisted from several of the northwestern counties of Iowa, for service against the hostile Indians on the northern border of the State. Prior to the commencement of the War of the Rebellion, troops from the Regular Army had been assigned to that service, but they had been withdrawn for service in the South, and volunteers had been called for to take their places. In response to the call, Captain Andrew J. Millard, of Sioux City, Iowa, was commissioned by Governor Kirkwood and authorized to enlist and organize a company of cavalry. Sioux City was designated as the rendezvous of the company, and there, on November 14, 1861, it was mustered into the service of the United States, by Lieutenant George S. Hollister, of the Regular Army, under special authority of the War Department, bearing date August 14, 1861. The company numbered 93 men—rank and file—at the date of its muster into the service.¹ From that date it is well known that the company was actively engaged in the duty of guarding the northwestern frontier and protecting the settlers from incursions of hostile bands of Indians. Careful search of the records in the office of the Adjutant General of Iowa fails to reveal the official reports of its operations, or of the casualties sustained by the company prior to the date of its transfer to the Seventh Iowa Cavalry, on July 25, 1863.² The compiler regrets that he has been unable to find the data which would have enabled him to give at least the principal events connected with the service of this company, during the twenty months preceding its assignment to the Seventh Cavalry. At the time the Northern Border Brigade was being organized, under the supervision of S. R. Ingham, Aid-de-Camp to Governor Kirkwood, that officer states in his report that he found Captain Millard's company performing faithful and efficient service at Spirit Lake, and later in his report he states that First Lieutenant James A. Sawyers, of that company, had been chosen as the commander of the Northern Border Brigade, with the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. Commenting upon this appointment, Mr. Ingham says: "Permit me to say that an excellent selection was made. In my opinion, no better man could have been found for this service."

The service of the company, after its assignment to the Seventh Iowa Cavalry, is described in the Historical Sketch of that regiment, contained in this volume. It was identical with that of the regiment, and involved the endurance of great hardships and participation in many fierce conflicts with the Indians. At the battle of White Stone Hill, Captain Millard and his company fought most gallantly, under the immediate command of General Sully, and received special mention in his official report, for the splendid manner in which they had performed their duty. The names of the officers and men composing the company, together with their personal records of service, will be found in the roster of the Seventh Iowa Cavalry. Its casualties are also included in the Summary at the close of the history of that regiment. The subjoined roster contains the names of the officers and men who were originally mustered in with the company, together with additional enlistments and those rejected by the Mustering Officer.

The reference "See Miscellaneous" in the roster of the Seventh Iowa Cavalry applies to the records under that head in the office of the Adjutant General, and not the Miscellaneous Volume of this work.

An Iowa Cavalry Company WHICH BECAME
Company A, Eleventh Pennsylvania
Volunteer Cavalry

OF AN
IOWA CAVALRY COMPANY
Which Was Assigned to the State of Pennsylvania AND BECAME
Company A, of the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry

The subjoined roster shows the names and service records of a company, composed exclusively of Iowa men. A foot-note, appended to the original roster of the company, reads as follows:

This company was originally raised for Colonel Josiah Harlan's "Independent Cavalry," which afterwards became the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry. Captain Stratton's company (Company A) was an Iowa company, and commissions were issued to its officers, by the authorities of this State, at the request of the general commanding the division in which said company was, at the time of the organization of the regiment.¹

The roster shows that, upon the completion of its organization, the company numbered 83 men, rank and file. Beyond the publication of the roster—and the foot-note referred to—but little further reference is made to the company in the Adjutant General's Reports, except the correspondence with the War Department, claiming credit for this company upon Iowa's quota of troops, which credit was subsequently allowed. Therefore, in the absence of the necessary official data from which to prepare a history of the operations of the company, the compiler avails himself of a history of its organization and service, contained in the "Annals of Iowa," published by the Historical Department of the State.² A revised roster is published as a supplement to this history, giving the personal record of service of each officer and enlisted man of the company. With the omission of some of the less important details, the history is herewith quoted, as follows:

Company A, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, was organized at Fort Dodge, Iowa, in August, 1861. When the news of the battle of Bull Run was received, a number of young men, who had been drilling during the spring and summer, resolved to organize a company for the service, and messengers were sent up the Des Moines River as far as Spirit Lake. On the 2d of September, the company met at the court house in Fort Dodge, and, before electing its officers, was sworn into the service of the United States, by James R. Strow, Justice of the Peace. Franklin A. Stratton was elected Captain; G. S. Ringland, First Lieutenant, and George W. Bassett, Second Lieutenant. The company went by stage to Cedar Falls, and thence by railroad to Dubuque, where, on September 21, 1861, it was mustered into the service of the United States by Captain Washington. It left Dubuque October 6th, and reached Washington, D. C., October 10, 1861. One of its members, Peter Bowers, was killed in a railroad accident near Lewiston, Pa., and was buried there.

At Washington, D. C., the company joined the regiment then known as Harlan's Independent Regiment of Light Cavalry. Colonel Josiah Harlan was a relative of Senator James Harlan of Iowa, and it was through his influence that Company A joined that regiment. Later, the Secretary of War, finding he had no authority to accept independent regiments, the name was changed to the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, that State having the largest number of troops in the regiment. On the 16th of October it left its camp on Seventh Street, and crossed the Potomac to Ball's Cross Roads, Va. In November it marched to Annapolis, Md., and thence proceeded to Fortress Monroe, Va., by steamer. Here stables were built for the horses, and the regiment was thoroughly drilled. . . .

On March 8, 1862, when the Merrimac sank the Cumberland, and the Congress was burned, the regiment was on picket duty on Newmarket Creek, and, on the morning of the 9th, saw the beginning of the fight between the Monitor and the Merrimac. The company was under fire for the first time on the old battle-ground of Great Bethel, in March, 1862. On May 7th the regiment was reviewed by President Lincoln. On May 15th Companies A, E, G, H and L, were sent to Norfolk, Va., and soon after to Suffolk. Company A was detached from the battalion and placed under the immediate orders of General Mansfield. Captain Stratton was a civil engineer and, under the direction of the General, made maps of all the routes between Suffolk and the Black Water In August the part of the regiment that had been on the Peninsula with McClellan came to Suffolk. On December 2, 1862, the company was in the mounted charge at Beaver Dam Church, in Virginia, where the enemy was routed and a number of prisoners were taken. On January 30, 1863, Company A led the advance in the attack on the Deserted House, in which General Prior was defeated. During the year at Suffolk the command was constantly employed on scouting and out-post duty. In June, 1863, the regiment, with other troops, was sent by steamer to the White House, on the Pamunkey River, and from there to Hanover Court House, where a wagon train was captured. At South Anna Bridge a mounted charge was made, by Companies A and G, upon an earth-work, and the work captured. The object of the raid was to break up the railroad communications north to Richmond. On the expedition the rebel General Fitzhugh Lee was captured.

In July a second expedition, under General Getty, was made against the Richmond and Manassas Railroad. The command returned to Norfolk and, on the 9th of August, a raid on the Petersburg and Weldon Railroad was made. It was hard service, and but little was accomplished. In October an expedition went to Matthew's Court House, to break up the contraband trade. Soon after, Company A was detached from the regiment and was placed on provost guard duty at Norfolk, Va. In the following February, the company returned to the regiment, and was sent to Williamsburg and participated in General Wistar's famous expedition against Richmond. The expedition got no further than Bottom Bridge, on the Chickahominy. On the return of the regiment to Williamsburg, Company A was detached and stationed at Gloucester Point, opposite Yorktown.

During the winter General Lee's army was encamped on the Rapidan River, and many of his men, especially cavalry, were furloughed for the purpose of recruiting their ranks. At different times during the winter twenty-five of the Gloucester company were captured. In March, 1864, General Kilpatrick made a raid on Richmond. A part of his command, under Colonel Dalghren, became separated and, while attempting to make their way to our forces at Gloucester Point, were ambushed in the night. Colonel Dalghren was killed, and the command scattered. A sergeant and five men made their way to our camp. A force sent out under Major Wetherill found none of Dalghren's command, but captured one man of the Fifth Virginia Cavalry, and one from the Ninth Virginia Infantry. . . .

April 9, 1864, we crossed the York River and marched to Newport News, on the James River, took transports to Portsmouth, and were soon at Camp Getty, where the cavalry division, under General August V. Kautz, was organized. It consisted of the Third New York, Fifth Pennsylvania, Eleventh Pennsylvania and the First District of Columbia regiments. The last were armed with the Henry repeating rifle, and two guns of the Eighth New York Battery were attached to the division. On May 5th, a beautiful spring morning, the division moved out of Camp Getty for the last time. Everything in the way of baggage or incumbrance was left behind. . . . The march was toward Petersburg, crossing the Black Water River near Wakefield Station, on the Petersburg and Norfolk Railroad. The advance struck the Weldon Railroad at Stony Creek Station, and captured the guard. The next day Jarratt's Station, with a guard of seventy men, was captured. The railroad bridge across the Notoway was burned, and Companies A and D were sent to destroy a wagon bridge to the left. From there the march was continued to City Point, which was in possession of General Butler and his colored troops. On May 11th we crossed the Appomattox at Bermuda Hundred. Raids, in which bridges were burned, railroads torn up, and much valuable property destroyed, were in constant progress, the division sometimes marching three hundred miles in six days. So constantly were we kept on the move that, on the night of June 1st, when we reached the lines in front of Petersburg, the men took off their clothes to rest for the first time since leaving Camp Getty on May 5th. The company had taken part in destroying a large amount of railroad track on the Danville, the South Side, and the Weldon Railroads. . . .

At Pittsburg the regiment was dismounted and manned the breastworks, performing infantry duty. On the 9th of June an attack was made on the Jerusalem plank roads. After some artillery fire, a charge was made and the lines carried. If General Gilmore had made any attempt to carry out his part, by an attack on the east line of the rebel works, Petersburg would have been captured. On the 15th of June another attack was made on the lines of the Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad. The regiment was under severe fire for some time, but failed to carry the works. On the 21st of June General Kautz's Division again left camp along the breastworks and crossed the Appomattox to Zion's Church, where it joined the Third Division of General Sheridan's cavalry, under General J. H. Wilson, in a raid, the object of which was the destruction of the Danville Railroad. . . . This was accomplished. For thirty miles not a vestige of railroad remained. The extreme heat of the fire, added to that of the sun, prostrated a number of the men. After a march, in which the men and horses suffered severely, the command reached the Petersburg and Weldon Railroad at Stony Creek Station. Here it met a strong rebel force. After sharp skirmishing, it marched north to Reams' Station, where the rebel infantry with bayonets, and our cavalry with sabers, came to a hand to hand contest. By outflanking the rebels, General Kautz's Division reached our lines at Petersburg that night. The column was led by the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, with Colonel Stratton in command, Company A taking the advance of the regiment.

General Wilson retreated south, and was four days in reaching our lines. After this the Eleventh Cavalry was on picket duty in Prince George County. It was with General Hancock in the attack on the Weldon Railroad August 22, 1864, where Company A had one man killed and one wounded. The picket duty in Prince George County was hard service. On the 20th of September, 1864, the members of the original Company A—except those who had re-enlisted—were mustered out of the service of the United States, at General Butler's headquarters, on the Appomattox.

On reorganizing the company, the officers were chosen from the veterans who had re-enlisted, as follows: Captain, E. P. Ring; First Lieutenant, William A. Barber; Second Lieutenant, Oscar S. Matthews. In October, 1864, they were with the cavalry in the actions north of the James River, where Lieutenant Barber was wounded and taken prisoner. He died in Richmond. The company was with General Sheridan at Five Forks. In the cavalry charge on the enemy's line, Lieutenant Matthews was killed. On the memorable 9th of April, the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry was in the front line. Iowa was there represented by the officers in command of the few remaining of grand old Company A. The regiment was mustered out of the service of the United States at Camp Cadwalader, Philadelphia, August 13, 1865. At that time there were but three of the original Iowa company left, Lieutenant Lucius L. Carrier, James Lindsay and Oscar S. Slosson.³

It will thus be seen that this splendid Iowa company, while assigned to and serving with a regiment from another State, nobly maintained the honorable record which was made by Iowa soldiers everywhere, throughout the great War of the Rebellion. Its first Captain—Franklin A. Stratton—became Major, Lieutenant Colonel and Colonel of the regiment, and Brevet Brigadier General of Volunteers, at the close of the war. He was twice wounded. Many of the members of the company have since achieved success in various avocations, both as private citizens and in official positions.

In the autumn of 1864, Governor Stone appointed Hon. Charles Aldrich as the Iowa commissioner to take the vote of the Iowa soldiers serving in the eastern army at the time President Lincoln was re-elected. Among the troops visited by Mr. Aldrich, while in the discharge of his official duty as election commissioner, was Company A, of the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, among whom were a number of his personal friends and acquaintances. The compiler deems it an appropriate closing of this sketch to quote a few brief extracts from the very interesting account which Mr. Aldrich has given of his visit to the eastern army, upon that occasion:

. A company had gone from Fort Dodge—with many of the members of which I was acquainted—to the Army of the Potomac. The theory in the formation of the regiment at the start was to make it a composite affair, comprising one company from each of a certain number of States; but the effort failed to materialize, the Adjutant General not being authorized to organize such regiments; and, when the command was fully mustered in, it was christened the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry. I do not go into the history of this company to any farther extent, for the reason that an article elsewhere in this number details minutely the services of the company, and presents its full roster, showing the killed and wounded, as well as the few in the command at its muster out. It is but simple justice that this gallant command should be placed permanently in our records. I trust that its appearance in these pages will accomplish that purpose.⁴

I reported to the Secretary of State at Des Moines, where I received my instructions, with the poll books, blanks, etc.; I also carried tickets provided by each of the political parties. The journey to Washington was without any special incident. I applied at the War Department for permission to visit General Grant's Army in my official capacity as "Army Vote Commissioner," and was referred to Major Henry Clay Wood, (who, I believe, if living, must be a gray-haired colonel by this time,) an Assistant Adjutant General. I found him an exceedingly affable and pleasant gentleman. He gave me the necessary permit, limiting my stay to a certain number of days—five or six. I took the first steamer down the Potomac and up the James, and in due time landed on the point at the junction of the latter stream with the Appomattox. I was not long in finding Charles A. Sherman, of Fort Dodge, who had been promoted to First Lieutenant and Assistant Quartermaster, and had been detailed for duty at the headquarters of General August V. Kautz, the distinguished cavalry leader. "Charlie" was an old political and personal friend, and gave me a most cordial welcome to his tent and mess table. He wanted to vote, and proffered to go out with me the next day to the point where the men were stationed, doing picket duty, far to the front.

³The names of all the killed and wounded, of those who died from wounds or disease, of those who were discharged for disability, or from whatever cause, will be found in the subjoined roster, which also contains the personal record of each member of the company, in so far as the same could be obtained from the history referred to.

⁴The Hon. Charles Aldrich was the founder of the Historical Department of Iowa, and was for many years engaged in the collection of historical matter, giving especial attention to the preservation of the early history of the State, and the history of Iowa military organizations.

We were up in the morning very early, leaving camp on horseback as soon as we had taken our breakfast. We crossed the James at Deep Bottom, on a pontoon bridge, and started off in the direction of Richmond, following the old road. . . . We now struck into the "Long Bridge road," which led off through thick, grand old pine woods, toward Richmond. This was an ancient and very narrow road, which had never been used very much, or had been long abandoned. It was very crooked, and at many points nearly choked up with briars and brush. But it was lined with our pickets. These men were stationed at such frequent intervals that each could see the one next ahead. They were all mounted, sitting motionless and mute, with their carbines cocked, the very impersonation of alertness and vigilance. It certainly looked very much like war, to see these grim soldiers peering into the woods, as if in momentary expectation of seeing the approaching enemy. We finally reached the most advanced picket post, where we found Colonel Spear and a company of cavalrymen. Lieutenant Sherman introduced me to the Colonel, stating the errand upon which I had come. After a hearty and most cordial greeting, I waited a moment to hear what the Colonel might say. He spoke in an instant, about as follows:

"Well, young man, if you are going to do anything here, you had better get about it—quick. You don't know the peril you are in at this very moment! That line of trees over yonder (across a meadow or pasture, and not more than forty or fifty rods away) is full of 'Johnnies,' and they may open fire upon us at any minute!"

"All right, Colonel, here goes!"

An election board was quickly appointed "by the commissioner" from the soldiers, (as the law stipulated,) and a cigar box fitted up for a ballot-box. The men were brought in as quietly as possible, and in less time than one can imagine our votes were all in and canvassed. . . . I was informed that we were within less than eight miles of Richmond, and that the spires of the city could be plainly seen from a point quite near by. I have always supposed that the election was held nearer the front, and in closer proximity to actual peril, than that organized by any other army vote commissioner. . . . We were not disposed to linger an instant, and Lieutenant Sherman and I mounted our horses and started for the rear. A young Second Lieutenant, by the name of Oscar Matthews, from Dickinson County, Iowa, returned with us. He was a pleasant, handsome boy. He had been in many battles, and the little black horse which he rode had not yet fully recovered from an ugly wound in the side—and had other scars besides. He was very attentive to us, and showed us many interesting objects along our route. At the battle of Five Forks, on April 1, 1865, this gallant young officer was killed, while leading his men in a charge.⁵

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million, from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1995. The public sector has also become an important employer of women, with 5.5 million women employed in the public sector in 1995, compared with 4.5 million in 1980.

There are a number of reasons why the public sector has become an important employer of women. One reason is that the public sector has a high proportion of women in its workforce. In 1995, 85% of the public sector workforce were women, compared with 75% in 1980.

Another reason is that the public sector has a high proportion of women in its senior management. In 1995, 35% of the public sector senior management were women, compared with 25% in 1980. This is a significant increase, and it suggests that the public sector is becoming more gender equal in its senior management.
